

O. Introduction

The Theory of Everything comes from the human soul, so it is actually inside everyone, but for me it has taken a lifetime's work to reveal it. It holds to the basic principle that everything is connected and everyone belongs. Consequently, this book is my truth and my truth alone. I stand alone on this because I have been working independently towards this truth for more than fifty years. I have also been listening to teachers, academics and world scholars for that amount of time as well, and find the main difficulty is that someone's opinion and understanding of the facts depends mostly on where they draw their salary. This means our current scientific theories are always the product of our social environment. One archaeology Professor I spoke to who does not work at Auckland University anymore said, "Of course there were people here in New Zealand well before the Maori arrived in 1350, but if I went around saying that I would lose my job!" Not only are professors prevented from voicing their true opinions in this way, but I do not believe money or politics should influence knowledge, especially with a big-theory. One of the greatest things we can do as humans is to openly share ideas with each other as we used to back in the 1950s, and that is the reason for writing this easy to read book.

The Theory of Everything discusses a new form of knowledge having deeper and more serious social consequences in which maths and physics – the sciences, the arts and technology all come together as one. It alludes to the social and scientific dilemmas of our times and dispels many of its inconsistencies and falsities, or as the author would say, "Accept nothing less than the truth; and I can promise you only one thing; if you read this book you will never see the world in the same way again!" So this publication is dedicated to those who want to see how they fit into the bigger picture.

The Theory of Everything is called a 'TOE' for short. The letter 'T' stands for the word 'theory' and the last letter 'E' stands for the word 'everything'. The number in the middle stands for zero and represents both the word 'nothing', and 'of.' This means that the Theory of Everything explains how the universe came into existence from nothing. In its simplest form the TOE can be explained just with the single digit numbers from zero to nine, which shows the answers to the biggest theory of all have been under our very noses all the time. Once you open these pages you will experience a simple and beautiful theory that's going to change the world.

To put a big theory like this together it has been necessary to examine the simplest numbers and the theory of wave vibrations, which together are called the universal energy. Not only in this respect is the Theory of Everything easy to understand and very elegant in its beauty; there is only one precondition, the reader has to be willing to open the mind to a new way of thinking, the only consequences of which will be finding the truth.

The Theory of Everything is not a new theory, it has been expounded many times before in the ancient past. Let me put it this way, the diagram below shows an ancient Egyptian myth from the first dynasties in which it was thought the world was supported by four elephants riding on the back of a turtle that in turn was floating on an ocean. I found this picture in an old encyclopaedia I was given at the age of seven.

When you think about this myth, it's really quite an advanced concept because the ocean has been described by the ancient Egyptians as a limitless 'water' of nothingness, darkness and chaos called the 'primeval Nun.' It was a sacred lake that symbolised the non-existence before creation. Nun can be described in modern terms as representing 'a nothing force and the number zero' within the absolute state.

Out of Nun, ex nihilo, arose a self-developed being by magic and love, called the creator god Atum. 'Atum' is where we get our word 'atom' from, 'ex nihilo' means 'out of nothing' and Atum grows five appendages to become the turtle in this myth. The four legs and head of the turtle represent the five 'pillars' upon which the universe is supported, otherwise known as the five primordial numbers, which in turn split into passive and active forces to form the ten single digit numbers. What the ancients called the turtle, we call the 'beautiful equation', which is also the core equation of the universe and the fundamental basis of the TOE. The four elephants of Atum represent the four states of matter that make up the world: plasma, gas, liquid and solid.

The ancient Egyptians also regarded cats as sacred animals that could 'walk' between the universes, much as we regard Schrodinger's cat in quantum physics.

In 2012, when my youngest daughter Nadia was fifteen years old she came to me saying, "Dad, I've just experienced an amazing vision!"

As she was into art at the time I replied, "Why don't you draw down everything you saw with this pencil on this piece of paper, because when you have such a clear vision like that it's important to keep a record?" After Nadia had drawn what she had seen in the vision I asked her, "It looks to me you have drawn a cat holding a sphere. However, I would like to hear your opinion. What do you think it is, and could you describe the feelings that also came with the vision?"

"That's really close Dad." Nadia replied. "But it's the cat that made the universe!"

"Now, that's really weird!" I replied and we both had a good laugh. So I finished off the drawing for her by adding some colour and stuck it to the wall where it remained for two years while I continued writing the Theory of Everything.

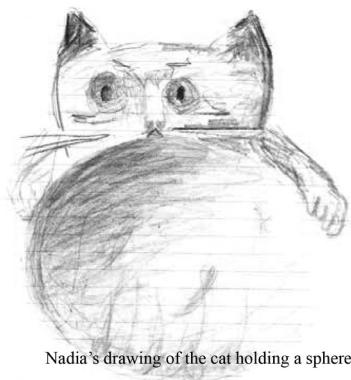

One day after Nadia had reached seventeen years of age she came into my writing room and casually said, "Dad, we have never worked out that the 'Cat that created the universe' vision really means."

"Well what do you think it means Nadia? Personally I think it means the universe is based on simplicity and how everything started from the first ten numbers!" Nadia thought for a while as if drawing an answer from a higher plain.

Then she replied, "That's fairly close, but I feel we as humans really need to get back to basics in the same way as the cat lives its simple life, because that's how we can find happiness, love and of course paradise!"

I finally replied, "What we all learn from this is that the secret of the universe is in its simplicity, just as our own lives should be."

The TOE means 'everything', which by definition must be a practical everyday experience to make it work. Auckland is where I have lived for most of my life and Auckland is the current situation, which is the best place to start on the first chapter.

1. This is Auckland

Abstract: I decided to start this book with a chapter on Auckland because it is a good example of what is going on in New Zealand at present. I am writing because there is great concern for the changes happening as we are all being turned into economic slaves by selfishness, greed and money. Aucklanders have become trapped in a very narrow minded and self-serving culture where 'money is god', in the same way as a spider traps its prey in a web. I want to show the reader there is no need for this hopelessness, because I can remember what Auckland was like seventy years ago and there are much better things to look forward to, than to keep living this nightmare.

Sin-city and the Money-cult

The problem with the changes happening right now, is they are often shrouded in a labyrinth of complexity, which the average Aucklander does not understand and is all too busy trying to live their day to day lives.

© Ross Wiseman 2018

The Theory of Everything by definition means everything a theory can be, and most importantly put into the practical everyday experience of society. The square shaped pictograph shown above with a seven-pointed star inside represents the model of Auckland city. A pictograph is a picture or symbol standing for a word or group of words. In this case the words in question are 'Auckland city'. The pictogram of Auckland will help the reader to see how Auckland society is interconnected from the TOE perspective.

Auckland is what you get when the main goal is money. Consequently, things are not always what they seem, history is fiction, and we are all being turned into economic slaves by selfishness, greed and money. There can be no better example of this than Auckland, because it is the most blatant example of a social engineering project by the so-called 'masters of the economy'.

Currently, Auckland is the perfect model for what is really going on in New Zealand and other major cities around the world. The populations of these cities have been lulled over time into a state where they just have to accept the changes happening to them that go on over their heads as part of the money 'system'.

'The System' is defined as a coordinated assemblage of materialistic institutions amongst the people that is oppressive, exploitative and restrictive in its social environment. The system has become very complex, and along with that complexity we now live in the golden age of social engineering.

More poignantly, "The system creates soulless men and women who have none of their unique, original dreams; but instead live through the dreams provided by others. The system and the world we live in today is the satanic practice of tearing our souls away from the unique original person and forcing them into compliance and obedience to the state. In court we are surrounded and saturated by this third party illumination because nothing else is permitted. This takes place through an organised crime syndicate that gangs up on those not aware of the inculcation tactics they are subjected to. We have been put into a deep sleep and do not realise our free will has been trampled upon and being used against us as our souls keep giving freely the life force energy used by them to raise up the 'dead'." [Personal communication with Arthur Savage, Auckland, 2017]

The System is represented by the large grey square that defines the outer border of the square symbol shown in the pictograph above. The next shape inside the large square is a grey circle, almost as large as the square and also defined by the same grey area. This grey circle represents the materialistic paradigm of The System. The word, 'paradigm' means 'small model'; 'para' is small and 'digm' is a model; so what happens is that everyone constructs a small model in their own mind of the social system they live under. A paradigm can also be a simple philosophy in search of a solid foundation. Materialism does not provide that foundation because it comes from darkness.

Then inside the circle is a star with seven points, which is called a heptagram. A seven-pointed star is drawn with seven straight lines and the name is derived from the Greek numeral 'hepta' or 'seven' and the suffix '-gram' meaning 'a line'.

A small thing can open a Pandora's Box.

In Greek myth Pandora was the first woman made out of clay given to man as a gift from the gods as a revenge for obtaining fire from Prometheus. Pandora was forbidden to open a box; she disobeyed out of curiosity and released from it all the ills known to man, leaving only hope within. This myth is another version of the 'Adam and Eve' story.

So it was on Thursday the 26th of April 2018, the day after ANZAC day, the author went into the Henderson Branch of Kiwibank in Auckland to make a money withdrawal. The attractive teller who served me was a Muslim lady called Amlesh. "Would you take off your hat please?" She said in a cold authoritarian voice.

"No I won't, and why should I?" Came my knee-jerk reply, feeling a little surprised and annoyed at the same time, after having encountered such a blatant command.

"Didn't you read that notice?" Amlesh reached out her hand pointing with her pen to the little sign on the counter beside where I stood.

"When did that rule come into effect?" I responded. But she didn't reply. I felt at the time I should have done what she requested, but thinking about it afterwards why should I be intimidated by these people who gladly accepted me as a foundation member when Jim Anderton (1938-2018) started the bank in the first place, because he didn't like the main banks of NZ being owned by foreigners.

"This is a requirement laid down by the management, so please take off your hat?"

"No, I'm not taking off my hat! Don't you mean for the security cameras and five-eyes? You are worrying about the wrong thing!" I replied to Amlesh, who did not bother to reply but calmly continued her work and handed over the money. Most people in Auckland would see this situation as a simple straight forward request, but for me as a writer it's more complex than that.

"Thank you!" I said, and walked out of the bank to meet a friend.

"Ross, there you are." I said to my builder friend from Great Kauri Island, who was waiting for me near the Henderson train station. There was a pause with a little small talk. "Ross, I've just had a confrontation with a lady teller in Kiwi Bank who wanted me to take my hat off, unbelievable! This is the Surveillance State at its worst. I feel my rights and freedoms are slowly being eroded away with this sort of behaviour. I am an honest person, so why should thousands of people have to pay the price because of one lawless individual. And just because nearly everyone goes along with the 'system' and I choose not to, it's their problem not mine, and we should all do something about it."

Ross the builder from Great Kauri Island said, "I agree with you Ross. The day after ANZAC as well! Honouring the men who died so we could have our freedoms: like freedom of expression, freedom of assembly and association, freedom of movement, freedom to protest and presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law."

"Yes, well, it should be obvious they are infringing on my right to wear a hat in a public place." I also learned that a man was arrested for disorderly behaviour for yelling at Poppy Day collector soldiers in Tauranga (on 20/4/18). Disorderly behaviour is a very broad term that in this case took precedence over Freedom of Expression. The Bill of Rights would appear to be just empty words, like a dog without any bite. (NZ Bill of Rights Act 1990, Freedom of Expression section 14, the right to freedom of expression, including the freedom to seek, receive and impart information and opinions of any kind in any form)

A few days later I went into the Lincoln Road branch of Kiwibank and asked the teller, "What if a Muslim lady walked into your bank wearing a burka (face veil) and wanted to make a withdrawal?" (NZ Bill of Rights Act 1990, Freedom of Religion section 13, the right to freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief, including the right to adopt and hold opinions without interference of any kind).

"We would ask her to take off her Burka." She replied

Sure, if I walked into a Mosque, Temple or Church I would gladly take off my hat and shoes as a mark of respect, but banks are not holy places. Far from it!

Everything has become so complex these days. My father joined the BNZ as a teller before the Second World War and also served as a soldier in Egypt during the war with his banking experience. He always carried a pistol under the counter at the main branch in Queen Street, Central Business District, while serving customers but never had to use it.

My ex-next door neighbour friend, Graeme Lovell-Gadd contacted me by email on this question of identification, "Hello Ross, Yes, everywhere we go now we are watched by the State. The reason they want hats off is that bio-metric software uses measurements of the forehead, eyes and facial features to identify people. Queensland under urgency pareses (incomplete) laws used bio-metric observation software at the 2018 Commonwealth Games, and now the genie is out of the bottle they don't know what to do about it. Thanks to the Automobile Association, New Zealand has bio-metric driver licence photos which the Government and police can access any time they wish, as we have very loose laws around these things. The old argument, 'nothing to hide nothing to fear' is one of the most seductive self-betrayals of liberty one can imagine. We must never forget that it is easier for governments to create laws and instruments that compromise civil liberties than for them to be repealed or moderated."

I contacted by lawyer, Mr Geoff Turner of Duncan Cotterill, to know where the public legally stand. Geoff is an old school friend whom I also went to University with. "I hear what you say Ross, but I don't think you are right. It is the banks property after all, and they can make the rules about what their invitees can or cannot wear. Banning hats for clarity of ID is not oppressive or unconscionable. If you are upset, why don't you exercise your right of consumer choice, close your account, and deprive them of your custom?"

Graeme Lovell-Gadd responded: "Very disappointed to see Geoff has been fooled by the 'system' of manufactured consent."

I thought to myself, 'That leaves the Auckland Savings Bank (ASB) and the Bank of New Zealand (BNZ), which are a few of the main banks in Auckland.' Would the reader believe me if I told you the ASB and BNZ have been Australian owned banks for twenty years. They have continually misled the public with their deceptions and false advertising, pretending to be kiwi banks since 1947. The ASB used to be owned by the Federal Government of Australia, but it was privatised in complex stages beginning in 1991. Half of the current owners are the Commonwealth Bank of Australia (51%), and almost half are 'nominee' bankster Corporations like the Hong Kong Shanghai Banking Corporation that also register their shares on the New York Stock Exchange. The shareholding structure of these Australian banks can be traced into a deeply entangled web of interlocking international shareholdings that are the largest banking and financial institutions in the world. The Government owns the Reserve Bank of New Zealand, but who owns the New Zealand Government? Obviously, it is money! Jim Anderton said, "We don't really know who owns the ASB, all we know is that New Zealand doesn't own it!"

Wealth Creation in New Zealand

In 1950, New Zealand was the second wealthiest country in the world. Now it stands alongside Greece in terms of its wealth. At least the people of Greece are getting out onto the streets and doing something about their dire financial situation.

Despite the reports we hear that wealthy people are creating jobs for us, this is not really the case. It is a myth. Job and wealth creators are more often entrepreneurs who first created jobs and new business, and then became wealthy by exploiting workers. Having become wealthy, the most wealthy people in New Zealand next entered into a phase of wealth destruction: asset stripping, closing down businesses and removing capital so they could invest in more lucrative financial enterprises overseas.

The politicians were told by advocates of the new liberal economic theorists and corporate elites that deregulation and less taxation would result in more money freed up into productive business and employment, which was a lie. Instead, business investment has decreased by two thirds since 1980, and NZ manufacturing and value added exports have plummeted.

If the Government were really serious about stimulating the economy they would have increased benefits and the minimum wage. Businesses are shooting themselves in the foot by advocating their employers be paid less. So much for sound economic policy.

People with their fingers on the pulse of the NZ economy are leaving in droves because there is not enough spare cash in their wages after paying for essentials to buy a new business. There is no point starting a new business in a low wage country that cannot afford anything beyond the basic necessities.

Skilled trade's people and talented employees are leaving NZ because employers are allowed to use immigration, subsidies and union busting rules to pay less than the job is worth. Potential entrepreneurs have no cash even if the demand was there.

The Erosion of Civil Liberties

All this on top of a year of extended police power, police assaults on legitimate demonstrators and police forcibly arresting demonstrators exercising their civil rights and despite them being within the law. Legalising formally illegal spying, search and surveillance; police and spy agencies broke the law, so the Government then races to make their actions legal and making recourse to the courts against Government policy. For example, National illegally stymied caregiver's recourse to justice in this way. They have also made continued attacks on workers' rights, the unemployed and welfare beneficiaries.

New Zealand, the USA and UK were always democracies more in name than reality, and the gap between reality and fictional laws is widening. Now with Governments almost daily restricting individual freedom, legitimate protest and democracy, they are becoming more like the totalitarian states we used to criticise for their lack of consideration for human rights and the wishes and best interests of the people.

Then of course, we have the USA pursuing a man all around the world simply for telling the people how much their privacy was being breached by their own Government! We are getting the type of repressive dictatorship we used to fight against. Our Governments seem determined to return, slowly so we don't fight back, to the rule of the KGB or Gestapo. The Government is hiding their invasive tactics from our eyes, the majority go along with it because they don't realise what is happening to them and they are only hearing the sweet music, just like the pied piper of Hamlin.

Disinheriting Aucklanders through Privatisation

Let's take the Auckland Electric Power Board as a simple example. The AEPB was once owned by the ratepayers of Auckland during the 1990s. It became privatised through a fraudulent system of corporate governance, mismanagement and convoluted name changes resulting in Mercury Energy. It is very difficult to get to the root of the matter while having to take so many things into consideration when trying to understand what those kingpins were doing at the time, because those hollow men only think in the present. The future consequences of what they were doing at the time are well beyond their intellectual capacity, so it escapes them. Another problem was Aucklanders didn't really care then or now trying to understand what was going on because they were and are too busy on the tread mill trying to live their day to day lives.

When you have a docile population like that, the masters of the economy have become like cunning wolves, and the people have become like fearful sheep, described as 'sheeple'. The very few who have the time to understand and can think outside the 'system', are at least starting to realise what is really going on. Those few more informed people are like 'sheep dogs', who are trying to protect the sheeple from the wolves! But even they are people who have to work in a social environment where the good is seen as bad, and bad is seen as good? (personal conversation with Chris Newman, April '18)

Another secret of the 'masters of the economy' is to dumb-down the population as much as possible, because if you have a docile and dumbed down population, the institutions have better control over the masses. This is achieved through the Education System, the Media; including doing nothing about chemicals in the water supply and poisons in processed foods that affect the brain; and neglecting the Health System. It's also important to separate the old aged from children, so they cannot pass down their life experiences and knowledge to the up-and-coming-young millennial generation.

If there was ever an old model to describe present day Auckland it would have to be the 'Noddy in Toyland' series of books we used to read as baby-boomer children, such as: 'Noddy builds a house', 'Noddy buys a car', 'Noddy meets Bigears' (the media), and 'Noddy meets Mr Plod the Policeman' (the system). These are all fundamental and serious everyday life problems the majority of Aucklanders are struggling with.

Yes, whenever you mention 'Auckland' these days, it is synonymous with what has been termed 'the Auckland Housing Crisis', which has been caused by the problem of a very serious housing shortage. Few know how to fix the problem in practical terms, and the houses that are available for sale have become too expensive for the average Kiwi to afford. Not only the houses, but the combined problem includes traffic congestion on our roads, which have become choker block with cars, trucks and campervans in an uncontrolled free-for-all as ten thousand cars per month keep coming into Auckland on container ships. There is no balance to it, there is no end to it and it has all led to chaos. It's like a 'lolly scramble' ... It's like rats down a drain pipe on our motorways ... Aucklanders can no longer hold on to their 'City of Sails' dream; because it has all become a 'City of Cars nightmare'. (refer Alice Peacock, AA AK. Congestion Report, NZH, 1/3/18).

The media talk about these problems, in fact they talk about everything under the Sun, but they seldom offer any practical solutions; so nothing in real terms is done. They exacerbate problems and so do the police whose work needs to fill a quota system to bring in the required revenue each year with their traffic and speeding fines that fail to reduce unlawful driving behaviour. They seem to target the honest citizen just as lions hunt prey on the African plains, yet put criminals in the 'too hard basket' (refer Dr Sarah Cowie, 'Why speeding fines don't work', NZH, 10/1/18).

One lady I meet in the central North Island, who came from Auckland told me, "The only time I'm happy is when I'm driving down the southern motorway and see Auckland in my rear vision mirror!" Maybe that lady realised, as many are beginning to, 'Money and Auckland' are synonymous. Money is only the means to the end, not the end in itself.

During the 1950s, New Zealand was a wealthy country with a trove of natural resources. Our beautiful climate, the absence of ferocious mammals and deadly reptiles meant we were living in a virtual South Pacific paradise. But look at it now, and when the main goal is money, has it done us any good?

The combined problems to put it mildly, have become described as a crisis, or what may be called a definite period of instability leading to the expectation by most people that something will be done about it, and decisive change will happen. But this invariably turns out to be false hope, until the next crisis appears on the horizon.

The problem is, who knows how to fix it, who knows even what is really going on, and above all who really cares about wanting to fix it? The reality of course, is those that love money are in paradise and want things to stay exactly as they are.

To tell the truth, this period of instability in Auckland did not happen by accident, it has really been imposed upon Aucklanders in the form of a carefully orchestrated and well-planned Socio-economic Engineering Project. There have been four main players: nine years of a National Government, the Auckland SuperCity Council, the Banks (mostly owned by Australia) and the mainstream Media (mostly owned by big business corporations in Australia). On a secondary level three more players come into the mix: Real Estate Agents, Insurance Companies and Car Dealers would also have to be included amongst the evil institutions. A good Real Estate Agent earns between two and three million dollars per year in Auckland, a bad one only a million dollars. Who would want to be Prime Minister when you can earn that kind of money? Yes - money is their god.

Between each point of the star in the square pictogram is a grey kite shape called a 'quadrilateral' because it is also made of four straight lines or sides that can be grouped into two pairs of equal length that are adjacent to each other. There are seven of them and these seven quadrilaterals represent the seven institutions responsible for the carefully orchestrated and well-planned Socio-economic Engineering Project most Aucklanders are told is a Housing Crisis. Each quadrilateral combines overall to form the construction of a heptagon, which represents The System that controls the economy. These seven players, the heptagon, these seven institutions, are the real masters of our economy, and they are all unofficially cooperating with each other on an institutional network level called a 'cabal'. A cabal is the formation of a small political group that neglect their responsibilities to the public and are mostly there to serve their own interests. Governments have been instituted amongst the people to carry out the wishes of the people. Instead the heptagon has turned democracy on its head and into a hypocrisy. Talking the people into thinking they have the best system going.

If the heptagon or cabal does not act democratically they are acting under the false pretext of a quasi-dictatorship. Quasi-dictatorship means a virtual dictatorship where the truth is hidden from the eyes of the public and the wool is pulled over the eyes of the sheeple. This cabal is also a plutocracy, which is rule by the wealthy and business community who finance the Government, which in turn causes the government to become less transparent for the people. The government is in a difficult situation here, it must obey the money-god that finances it, but at the same time try to carry out the will of the people. It helps if the government can also turn the people into materialists and consumers for their money-god. Elections are held to let the people think the government is following the will of the people, but the two main parties are the same as each other and there is the same bureaucratic control mechanism behind both of them. This is the perfect System.

When the business kingpins say "jump", the politicians ask "how high?"

In this way the political system has been structured to stop anything changing for the better of the people. It has been rigged so it can never change, or no changes can be made through the political bureaucratic process. It is very important for the survival of the institutions making up the secret cabal to keep and maintain the status quo, which is the wish of the elite controlling the political system. But it is opposite for the people whose vehicles and machines have been manufactured to give problems so they can service the car industry and other industries. For example, light bulbs are made to fail, many within days after purchase where the electricity supply fluctuates; but the original light bulb in New York Fire Station has never failed since the light bulb was invented. This is called the 'rip-off' society.

Through the brain-child of the media, advertising agencies and public relation consultants, the cabal is able to keep the inculcation going; which means insistent repetition and constant instilling of materialistic indoctrination and spin, to make the people think the system is performing its true function. The evil heptagon indoctrinates the public into what has proved to be, time and time again, a failed capitalist system. The public are encouraged to accept their weird form of logic that appears quite embarrassing to a well-informed individual.

The media, particularly television, is the main contributor here. By continually spoon feeding us 'news' on a daily entertainment basis, it somehow keeps up the illusion that money is everything. It is not television as we know it, and half the news is advertising time anyhow that turns the brain into 'scrambled eggs'. The news has become entertainment linked to sport, for we also live in a sports crazed and sports obsessed society, just as there was savagery and spectacle in ancient Rome before the Roman Empire fell (refer The Age of the Gladiators, by Rupert Matthews, Arcturus Pub., 2003). Sport is a glorification of the human body.

And just like ancient Rome, we currently watch unarmed Palestinian protesters whose land has been stolen from them being shot with live ammunition by Israeli soldiers. We are told by a glamorous news reader that they are terrorists, and Israel is the victim in all this. We get to see a million Rohingya refugees facing genocide and the survivors driven over the border into Bangladesh where the men are brutalised and many of the women are sold into sex slavery in Saudi Arabia; yet the Burmese Head of State and Nobel laureate Peace Prize winner, Aung San Suu Kyi, claims these 'refugees' went of their own free will. Another million families driven from their houses in Syria as America fights its proxy wars. Another million starved into submission in Yemen by Saudi Arabia provided with arms from America and Britain. All based on the model of the rape of Libya, a country with no foreign debt. This excessive entertainment is a sign of social failure and where child soldiers are employed by military corporations run by ex-US military.

Of course the Kingpin businessmen are linked to the military and the governments are the middlemen. In India and South America the rich take ancestral and community land and claim it as their own. In the 1987 Fiji coup a businessman who owned about 15 supermarkets was abusing and not paying staff, and when the Bavadra Government tried to address the problem, he organised the coup with Rabuka. Rabuka hired American special forces to carry out the coup. Rabuka and Peter Stinson appeared on television to announce the military had been taken over and parliament had been suspended. I used to sit next to Peter Stinson in accounting class at King's College, and managed to trace the Military plane that left Nandi airport a few days later on its return flight to America.

And then sport is followed by exaggerated bad weather reports to keep people inside so they can watch more television. It has been found that 90% of teenagers watch the screen for more than two hours per day. If you were able to go behind the cameras or into the newspaper offices, that is where you would meet the 'media clowns', and only then would you come to realise the distortion, the falsity and the superficiality of it all.

It doesn't take long for a person listening to their true feelings, to realise we are really standing on the deck of the 'Titanic', where people are just sleepwalking around and rearranging the deck chairs before the inevitable; before the unsinkable becomes unthinkable.

Meanwhile the Japanese car market continues to boom. A Japanese family could buy a brand new car and drive it around for a year after which time they would have to pay very high taxes on it, so it becomes more affordable to export those same Japanese cars for not much less than the buying price. When those cars come to New Zealand, many car dealers used to wind the odometer back to 20,000 Kms, and the market became flooded with cheap cars, which in turn put more pressure on Toyland to build road and housing infrastructure. For thirty years centred on the 1970s, nothing was done on Auckland infrastructure. We can just as easily make our own electric cars.

Cars need petrol, and freight that traditionally moved by rail was replaced by trucks, and trams by buses, due to the greed of businessmen in the 1950s and 60s. National's Prime Minister Robert Muldoon answered this problem in part by the 'Think Big' projects and tried to make New Zealand completely self-sufficient for its energy needs because of the huge oil and gas reserves on the Zealandia continental shelf and abundant hydroelectric potential because of the torrential rain. Money was borrowed from offshore banksters (criminal banks); while big business interests including the media became incensed; "why should the people of New Zealand have all the benefits and the corporations and institutions miss out?" they asked. Consequently, there was considerable industrial strife, bankster pressure and media backchat that ended up sinking the whole project. Admittedly Muldoon subsidised inefficient industry, propped up the currency at taxpayers' expense and gave hand-outs to welfare to buy votes. Muldoon was portrayed as a tyrant in the media, but we only realise now how really good he was. One good idea hits the dust.

Enter 'the fish-and-chip brigade', headed by David Lange, who said, "Economic life in New Zealand during the 1980s was like a Polish Shipyard, where everything from cars, television sets to clothing was manufactured by local workers and the country was prosperous". However in 1984, the newly elected Finance Minister, Roger Douglas, betrayed his own Prime Minister, took over control and transformed the economy over night by copying what was going on over in America. New Zealand had been screwed again as another idea hit the dust. Many businessmen told me they were afraid to wake up in the morning because the regulations had changed so fast, so they fled to Australia. These changes in Government regulations put thousands of state employees out of work. The financial markets were deregulated and the currency free-floated. Rich Kiwis poured into share trading and a wave of euphoria gripped the nation as never before, while the stock market surged to dizzying heights. The intoxication of that era resulted in the 1987 world crash.

At this time Aucklander Ray Smith was a self-made businessman who worked his way up to become one of NZ's wealthiest men by establishing Auckland Coin and Bullion Exchange in Parnell. He floated the company on the share market in his greed to make more money and traded as Goldcorp Holdings, which included a facility with the Bank of New Zealand who had selling agents through all their branches. Ray Smith had 1600 investors who bought gold, which Goldcorp held as a security and some of the money was invested in land. The BNZ didn't understand how the gold market worked. With the 1987 Share market crash, land values fell by 50%, the BNZ lied to the public and milked the company for all the cash reserves it was worth, the company directors behaved like vultures, and Ray Smith was turned into a scapegoat. Ray Smith and his investors ended up with nothing overnight. (refer 'Where's the Gold? My Story' by Ray Smith, R & J Jensen Pub., 1994) (personal conversation with Kent Baigent, 4/6/2018)

Goodbye Democracy, Hullo Economic Slavery. Roger Douglas' economic philosophy was elitist in the extreme because he took the democracy out of his economic policy, and the Reserve Bank of NZ did exactly the same thing in a much more expanded role. Consequently, wages were set by 'the market' over which employees had no control, rather than by negotiation between union officials, employers and the Government. Other economic issues such as interest rates, wages, prices and the housing market were by design and even out of reach of the ballot box. The objective was to cut the people of NZ out of the political sphere and restrict citizens' ability to participate in the decision-making process. This affected the economic stability of the country because people no longer did the people have recourse to the ballot box or allow them to have any control over the conditions in which they worked and lived. (refer Hugh Oliver, 'The Making of Rogernomics', 1989)

Douglas was forced to resign in 1988, followed by Lange in 1989 because Douglas had done too much damage to the country. The rifts in New Zealand still remain as the Labour party got away from its core principles.

The backbone of the New Zealand economy has traditionally been the dairy industry and an economy that milks cows, including meat, wool, wood, paper and tourism; which play into the old model of supply and demand. With the high price of land, finance companies found farmers were a high risk loan proposition in relation to the price they got for milk and wool. Consequently, to keep the banks happy farmers had to increase their stock sizes. This put farmers under a lot of pressure, the environment suffered and the run-off into the waterways like the Waikato turned that river into nothing less than a sewer.

It became less profitable to keep on milking cows, because the law of diminishing returns had set in. So the Masters of the economy, their gatekeepers and lapdogs had to come up with the idea of milking Aucklanders like cows; which is how and why the 'FIRE'-economy was born. Auckland's FIRE economy began when the population of just over a million sheeple became captives to an amoral and unstable economic system powered by Finance, Insurance and Real Estate. Let's fleece the people like sheep because Aucklanders didn't know what's going on and they're easily influenced by political talkers. It's the same if you pluck a chicken one feather at a time; no one notices over the decades. Yes indeed, New Zealander's have lurched from crisis to crisis over the decades. For the latest crisis, why not let the 'banksters' themselves do the dirty work.

As long as the education system could dumb down the children and the universities churned out politically correct 'yes-people', they could get away with it. Consequently, Aucklanders were collectively steered towards another watershed by their own National government. Those cunning politicians were naturally in bed together with themselves; they only cared about each other and their own interests, and of course did the minimum they could for their country, while serving the business community. These people were so greedy trying to win elections so they could get all the perks, prestige and power. TV3 went bankrupt, but was bailed out by the NZ Government. When the corruption was pointed out by John Campbell on his 'Campbell Live Show', it was immediately cancelled and the government slept a lot easier after that (NZH, 28/5/15).

The true causes of the Auckland Housing Crisis unfold like peeling off the layers of an onion, because the politicians in turn are controlled behind the scenes by Big Business Corporations and the media, not the people. Elections are only there to give the illusion of democracy. The actual cause of the 'crisis' was done by the money-men taking over control of the NZ Government and subjecting it to direct influence of the corporations.

The root cause of the Housing Crisis and its FIRE economy initially involved the National Government's immigration policy. The net annual immigration figures in the eight years leading up to the year 2013 had always averaged around 9½ thousand; but in 2014 the immigration figures suddenly shot up to 51 thousand, 65 thousand in 2015, 70½ thousand in 2016 and a record 76 thousand in 2017. In other words, Auckland experienced a flood of foreigners. Preference of course was given to wealthy immigrants from China that could afford to buy a house. Many of those borrowed off the Hong Kong Shanghai Bank at 1%. The housing market was flooded with Chinese buying up houses at high prices and holding onto them so they would not lose money on the investment as the market cooled and their home market collapsed. Consequently, Auckland is saturated with new houses just standing empty all over the place. The HSBC is a criminal bank that had made huge profits by laundering drug money from around the world, and these banksters ended up putting huge pressure on Aucklanders trying to buy a house. This in turn increased demand and house prices skyrocketed further. It sent shockwaves all around the country.

The media and politicians went to great lengths to hide these basic facts from the people of Auckland, even denying there was a housing crisis. When Winston Peters lost his seat to National, that was when it made its move to increase immigration and immigrants flowed into Auckland more than babies were being born to Aucklanders. At the height of the 'crisis' new born babies were sleeping between their parents on the platform of Auckland Central Railway Station, which I saw with my own eyes. (refer 'Immigrants outnumber city babies', Alice Peacock, NZH, 20/2/'18) By 2018 there were 26,000 homeless in Auckland alone.

The influence of big business over Government policy behind the scenes, out of sight, behind closed doors and out of the public mind, is to blame for the polarisation of New Zealand society and its economic inequity. Everything is inter-related, and we are all part in some way of the overall problem. Everything has been turned on its head. "Instead of the State being there to serve the people, the people now serve the state through its money-cult of economic growth and manic materialism" (refer Peter Lyons, NZH, 29/11/17).

By 2018, to rectify the damage done by National, the new Labour Government Housing Minister hoped to set up an independent body to override the 'vested interests' and corruption of Auckland Council just to get more houses built. (Front page NZH, 31.8.18)

Dark Origins of the Housing Crisis

Following the money trail further back still, the most recent 'crisis' had its dark origins back during the 1990s, after John Key graduated with a B.Com degree at Canterbury University and joined Merrill Lynch over in America in 1995. Merrill Lynch was and is one of many global investment banksters and parasitic corporations that had been selling risky investments that were inappropriate for public consumption over in America. Too big to fail, the American people had to bail them out. Consequently, by the late-90s the Nasdaq bubble had burst amongst widespread corporate accounting scandals; and in 1999, to escape their public responsibilities, Enron and Merrill Lynch engaged in a deal involving 'parking' Enron assets with Merrill Lynch, which allowed Enron to enhance its public financial position and pay its executives exorbitant and unwarranted bonuses. Never mind the people that lost everything, this was an extremely toxic and evil climate of bankster white-collar corporate fraud to which the young John Key became exposed.

At the same time John Key had received training as an 'economic hit-man', gaining the appropriate reputation as the 'smiling assassin'. Another former investment banker who wrote the book entitled, 'Confessions of an Economic Hit Man' was John Perkins who stated, "Who am I, of all people, a man who had enslaved countries through debt, who had threatened and corrupted presidents ... How could I compare what I'd done as an economic hit man with the actions of soldiers and torturers? [in the Vietnam war] But comparison was not the issue; the one supported the other. Economic hit men countered on their marks [of success] knowing that the military waited in the wings. In the end, the only thing that really mattered was that we had to change, that there had to be a better way. Human beings had to find another means of dealing with their fears and with the urge to possess more territory, more resources [and control over populations]. We simply had to move out of our dysfunctional patterns of exploitation and mayhem. We have to awaken from our stupor [of false dreams]. (refer p71.'The new confessions of an economic hitman', by John Perkins, Uncensored Mag., Issue 51, Mar/June 2018)

The National party needed a good 'show pony' to overturn Labour, and the perfect storm was beginning to gather in the run-up to the 2008 election. Labour had moved away from its core principles of looking after New Zealand's labourers and workers, so they were already in a weak position.

John Key had entered NZ Parliament after the defeat of the National Party in 2002, and he became deputy leader when Don Brash and his hollow-men lost the 2005 election, following a series of scandals. New Zealand has been rocked by so much instability and inconsistent policy, decade after decade, by politicians who thought they had all the answers but in fact knew so little about anything. That's because the National Party is really a wolf hiding in sheep's clothing. If the wolf just keeps quiet most people think it's a sheep. That's the reason the next time round the National party needed someone who was good looking, wore a nice suit, smiled a lot and could fool the lady voters.

On the other hand, the National Party needed someone that didn't talk too much or implicate themselves, someone who left plenty of wiggle room in their answers and always kept away from serious discussion. Above all, the show-pony they were looking for needed plenty of 'spin', someone who could lie through their teeth and who could offer a bit of 'stability' with their quiet demeanour. John Key was really the saviour of the National Party. He fitted the bill and they were prepared to pay him a good salary. This required a two-year-trip to Canberra in Australia, which enabled him to be groomed as the 'wolf' in the cunning technique on how to 'roll' Brash and become a politician. He took to it like a duck to water. With his good looks, smiling face on bill boards and charming spin-techniques, John Key finally won the 2008 election that brought National into Government. After National won, Helen Clark immediately resigned and joined the United Nations, leaving the Labour party in disarray just as National had been when Helen Clark was Labour's show-pony.

Show-ponies don't stay there for long; they do considerable social and environmental damage to the country, they get their money; and they are gone. Naturally there is a lot of stress involved in jumping through the different hoops, and they eventually come to realise they're not really the ones in control; they're even told when to kiss babies for the cameras at election time, as I saw Helen Clark doing in Henderson. As one show-pony hits the dust, there's always another to take its place, then another, and then another one hits the dust, but the same kind of people are always working behind the scenes. It doesn't matter which party you happen to be in or whichever party politician you happen to vote for, these kinds of people are all the same as each other!

The first thing John Key did as Prime Minister in his arrogance and his recklessness, hand in hand with his cronies who also worshiped the Auckland fiery 'money-god', was to flog-off the last of New Zealand's assets to corporate interests. Helen Clark had already sold off much of New Zealand including land to foreigners. The next thing John Key did was to focus on setting up the Auckland SuperCity Council, with the amalgamation of its seven territorial authorities under the Auckland Council for the new social-engineering project. The main problem with councils at that time was they were overextending their authority. In part the amalgamation move was to further concentrate power and also to hide the terrible corruption going on, including all the stupid mistakes bureaucrats were making who are not attached to the reality of their situation. The bigger the institution becomes, the greater the degree of corruption that prevails in the NZ environment. It's not long before a council like that becomes a den of thieves. It's not long before any institution becomes like a frat house where young ladies suffer years of innuendos, inappropriate behaviour, sexual harassment and vile sexual acts from male colleagues and from senior 'silverbacks' (refer 'Female Lawyer', by V. Tapaleao, NZH 1/3/'18)

Under certain conditions the 'singular ape behaviour' in modern humans can break out and become dominant, especially amongst some egotistical and powerful males. [A silverback gorilla is the mature, experienced male leader of a troop that has the preference when it comes to mating behaviour]. Mayor Len Brown was a good example of that when public opinion swung against him after news of his affair with Bevan Chuang. This is called the Weinstein effect that began in 2017, as also observed amongst silverback gorillas. In the 1950s, it used to be people like Hollywood's 'fatty' Arbuckle. Meanwhile, motels in many towns throughout the country became too expensive for the average kiwi, and were filling up with foreign prostitutes doing a roaring trade, and while the drug problem in Auckland and Northland reached epidemic proportions.

Sin-City as the new SuperCity became known was also the 'divided-one' due to separation. It became involved in so much controversy, contention and opposition to what was already a dysfunctional and corrupt system lacking transparency, oversight and accountability, with only the facade of institutional legitimacy in what was in reality a huge inefficient bureaucracy described by even the people working in there as 'a mad dog chasing its own tail.' (Personal interview with a councillor in 2017 who didn't want to be named)

Excessive materialism creates chaos and strife, symbolised by the 'S' logo. Strife is when everyone is forced to work against each other.

In a SuperCity Council, the arrogant 'fat-cats' walk the corridors of power 'in their own time' and without shame. They are profane and do violence to the law. They are oppressors who obey no one and accept no correction. It has become a lair of corruption and wild beasts, simply because they are cut off from the realities of everyday life with their 'job security'. They give out contracts to friends and mates, just as John Key did when he sold off the assets of this country. Those fat-cats don't care less about the reality faced by honest hard working men and women that need expensive building permits and resource consents. They don't care which consultants and perks are being paid for by Auckland ratepayers who are being taken for a huge ride. The Aucklanders whose rates have skyrocketed in proportion to the increase of house prices, and been 'masked' through the simple manipulation and division of rates into a breakdown of separate expenses. Consequently, the people of Auckland have become pawns in a much bigger game. They have become stressed by these fat-cats, and don't realise when they are under stress because it has been applied in a cunning and slow way over a long period of time. Yet the people do not know what stress is, or how to recognise it through the influences of this evil economic-slavery placed upon their shoulders.

This is when the third and most evil institutional player of all comes into the picture; the media. The media seem to have lost the plot completely in terms of the five fundamental principles of journalism, where investigative journalists are unheard of these days. Like the programmes on television, their aggressive attitudes reflect the state of the economy. Superficially, the media in New Zealand walk the talk, but in practical terms do sweet little to help fix the problems. Then on the international news front, the media tell only one side of the story; therefore it is defined as propaganda. The Media of course at the height of the Housing Crisis were there 'with bells on', to support the 'boom bubble', and fan 'the Fire economy' (refer p8, Jane Kelsey, Prof. of Law, Auck. Univ, TOE, 2017).

The media also help to take the attention away from the governments failing policies, with catching 'petty-criminals' and front pages glorifying the human body and sport. The media and government are in turn supporting the status quo, until the changeover into a new government, when it's too late to do anything anyhow and their show ponies have escaped into the 'wild'. "Oh!" they say, "This mistake will never happen again and we are having a complete and full investigation!" and it takes many years to complete. Nine years of the Key Government in this way did considerable damage to NZ society. The Key dictatorship in the guise of a democracy.

Most mainstream media organisations in New Zealand and Australia now publish outright lies and serve as nothing more than propaganda outlets for the agendas of institutions, banksters, arms and drug companies; because they are one of the big corporations themselves. There is no Press freedom. Facts are now as fluid as the latest Wikipedia entry change. But it is the manipulation of human political history, first by religions and now by science, which is slowly starting to unravel. By working in with the other big players as part of a cartel, Aucklanders were tempted into making the 'big jump' into buying their first house or a second one, resulting in decades of debt. It was always emphasised how much money could be made, not mentioning that financially strapped people were taking all the risks by buying and selling their own houses, while nothing was said about how the Real Estate Agents themselves making several million dollars a year on the backs of the 'risk-takers feeding frenzy'. And those thick skinned agents working in 'shark infested waters' themselves, were always in a favourable position to snap-up the best buys, because the average person was mostly unaware of how big the current value bubble had grown. What those agents sometimes do if they find a seller who needs to state a price of worth on their property, is send around a whole gang of agents to give the 'under' valuation, so the poor seller thinks they all can't be wrong. The whole housing market during the decade National was in power became nothing less than a cauldron of greed and corruption, and as far as the media was concerned the upward corrections in house prices became self-fulfilling prophecies. (NZH, 13/7/17) Penthouses in the CBD are selling for $35 million, which indicates the degree of polarisation (NZH 16/6/2018)

What is truly bizarre was a simple two bedroom bungalow state house on the Newmarket side of Remuera in Hapua Street worth just over $3 million. Another similar state house on Ross Street between Victoria Avenue and Orakei Road was selling for just under $3 million. When the 80-year-old sole tenant of one of those houses was told its Rateable Valuation (RV) he replied, "Bullshit!" (pA7, NZH, 30/1/18). If that wasn't enough, on page three of Auckland's NZ Herald, a headline on a housing article read a couple of days later (1/2/18), "House with sea view: Add a million." For the media and agents to behave like this, they must be out of their minds! And that tenant was completely right. Another two-storey dilapidated house in St Marys Rd was purchased for $800 a hundred years ago and has an RV of 2½ million now (NZH, 13/3/2018).

What the real estate agents and media do is talk house prices up and create their own housing bubble, which is a good time to sell and make a lot of money. The banks are in on it too with their mortgage interest rate changes. In this way, an Auckland house can double in value in a few years; foreigners learn about the bubble and engage with the market as it goes crazy for a while. Then, all the players slowly go quiet for a few more years as the market cools and values decrease not quite as much as the original levels because people are consolidating, building up and waiting for the next bubble. This is the way they control the market and confidence trick Aucklanders who are not aware of what is really going on over their heads.

I can remember my father paid $12,000 for our two-story house off Victoria Avenue in the early-1950s; now the rates alone are $12,000 per year. We had moved from a simple one storey bungalow, only 100 yards from Takapuna Beach that the family had bought during the early-1940s for 1,200 pounds.

So it is not surprising to find that the New Zealand media scrum distorts the truth, lies, makes fools out of truthful people, and spends the whole time running away from the truth. Gone are the days when the media used to uphold its code of ethics of the seven fundamental canons of journalism: truthfulness, unbiased reporting, accuracy, objectivity, impartiality, fairness and public accountability. They are only accountable now to the masters of the economy and the public are pawns in this huge institutional game of chess.

In reality the media is just one institution amongst the cartel of the many, composed of purposeful and self-aware people that position themselves between unscrupulous opportunists and loyal lap dogs of the state who are often openly hostile towards the people. It is plain economic slavery. There cannot be a better description.

In addition, when it comes to international news/entertainment the New Zealand media, just like Auckland's NZ Herald in particular, just repeat wholesale what is dished out from Americas mainstream Media. In fact on Saturday the 24th February 2018, President Donald Trump stated "Media are enemies of the people."

"The media are the most powerful entity on Earth. They have the power to make the innocent look guilty and to make the guilty innocent. That's power, because they control the minds of the masses." (quote by Malcolm 'X' who was assassinated)

The inculcation leans towards a culture of competition, polarisation, division and separation. Superficially these institutions like to present a façade of perfection, but internally they are the opposite. They are full of hollow men who get paid unrealistic salaries and bonuses, which in turn pull them away from reality. But worse still, they are beginning to understand the mechanisms and motives of the group mind, which is also now called the 'psychosphere'. It is now possible to control and regiment the masses according to elite will, and without the masses knowing it. This falsity only increases with institutionalisation ... but where can a civilisation go when it's all based on lies?

Reader's Comment

One day (27/5/2017), a busy neighbour friend called Beth, who only had time to read the introduction of my previous book, 'TOE: A Beginners Guide', said to the author, "Your book is about the bad; but there is a lot of good in this world Ross. You should try to look at the good, and then you will write a better book if you do that!"

I thought about what she had said for a while and eventually replied, "Through the bad things the lessons are learned." What has actually happened is we 'the people' have descended into a spiritual dark age. We need to learn the lessons of how we ended up in this mess and create a better future for ourselves! For example, Western Civilisation lives off wars. They do this to justify their power. If there was peace the defence budget would be cut, and they would have to hold free and fair elections! It can be illustrated by the following story, "Once upon a time there was a leaf on a tree that insisted it was independent and self-made. Then one day a fierce ill-wind blew the leaf off the branch to the ground below. As its life slowly ebbed away it looked up at the magnificent old tree that had been its home and began to realise it had never been alone and had no need to feel afraid. And in its arrogance the leaf wished it had not wasted time being so selfish, when there could have been so much more to enjoy in its life with others. The moral of the story is we are all like leaves on a tree and we are all involved with each other. Each leaf is like an individual person but belongs to the tree of life, which is the 'psychosphere' because while we are all separated with a different body we are all connected spiritually and look up to our creator for guidance."

The Basis of Materialism

The basis of materialism is the monetary system, which was originally only used as a medium of exchange on what is today the western coast of Turkey, by King Alyattes of the Lydian State in the 600s BC. Materialism runs rampant in any society when the use of money goes beyond its basic function as a medium of exchange; such as with the introduction of usury, where money is used to create more money for the minority. The greatest evil ever inflicted upon humanity has been the creation of this monetary system.

Materialism has become like the 'elephants graveyard', where dreams come to die, because it relies on hate and fear to achieve its goals. It is an artificial system that by definition includes knowledge suppression that has taken humanity away from nature and their own spiritual being. The people's eyes have been glazed over with false information, the boss decides how much we are paid, you can't live on the minimum wage and that is slavery.

The Artificial System

When the global baseline culture is materialism there are always two opposing social forces at work in the human social thought sphere: Love and Strife. One social force will be dominant and the other recessive. When Love is dominant in the social sphere, as it was from 1939 to 1973, the sphere develops a small topmost bulge called the counterculture, very much as the eye-ball has a slightly bulging lens. This counterculture 'lens' provided all the spiritual requirements of society and even tried to transform the baseline culture into a 'Love-society'. This counterculture were called Hippies, who turned out to be the first 'Truthers', and they produced the most interesting music the West has ever produced; but they also established a complete social revolution that was threatening to baseline Power. Unfortunately, on Earth we are not meant to find the love society. You can work your way towards it, but you can't achieve it and you will always fall away from the perfect state of total love, peace and truth because those things are unachievable for the majority materialistic people of the baseline culture, so the society inevitably moves on into its next phase of development.

The next phase is when Strife becomes the dominant force within society, while the counterculture lens shrinks back into its thought sphere again. When Strife is dominant, as it is at present from 1973 to 2032, there develops an 'underbelly lens' this time on the bottom-most part of the thought sphere. This underbelly bulge has a profound effect on society as a whole; in relation to crime, drugs and the monetary system. There is no part of society that is not affected by its own underbelly, because for example the media begins to influence how people think and behave. The courts and lawyers become temples of injustice. The medical system and processed food industry interact to destroy health. Religion creates a barrier that replaces god with materialism. Universities impede and hamper the progress of knowledge, because as science is only a physical interpretation of nature infused with politics, it becomes a one-sided discipline based on materialism and money. Consequently, the big theories like the Big-bang are based on the atomic bomb and the Theory of Evolution is based on the elite and the struggle of the people under them; just as the social pyramid of ancient societies has always defined the different strata of society. Adam Smith was the one who originally devised Economic Theory based on capitalism and the ownership of land and the unlimited abundance of resources and exploitation of the environment. This economic theory upon which capitalism is now based has become a broken model. Consequently, we now live in a world where banks and politics destroy our economy. This is the last layer of the 'onion' that needs to be 'peeled off'; the monetary system; the final cause of all problems in our artificial society and its illusionary stability.

During the 1960s, inflation ran rampant and anyone who bought a house on debt could pay it off slowly on their rising wages, making a handsome profit at the end of it. Not anymore, because the tiger of inflation has been tamed. Meanwhile, the central banks and government have pumped trillions of newly created money into the economy with no apparent ill effect. Adding newly created money out of thin air into the economy without generating new goods and services of the same value reduces the purchasing power of the existing money. This new money robs the purchasing power from all the existing money. This will cause inflation if the wage-earning majority get hold of the newly created money, but not if it goes to the super-wealthy few, like banksters, financiers, the psychopathic elite or corporations. These are the criminals that create cyclical crashes and buy up your cheap assets, stocks and bonds, real estate, farms, and natural resources. The net result of the super-rich receiving new money is an asset bubble, which finally explains the Auckland Housing Crisis.

What has been happening not only in New Zealand but all over the world in the last decade or so is called asset-inflation, while the real world economy has remained the same. Assets have tripled in value in only a decade and caused wealth inequality and a polarisation of society. There have also been Stock and Corporation debt bubbles over the decades, where if a corporation was too big to fail the public bailed them out, as what happened to the Bank of New Zealand.

Extremes of wealth inequality and the polarisation of society have resulted in social unrest, disorder, uprisings and revolution. To quell the social unrest the irresponsible masters of the economy in some places have created trillions more in new money for mass distribution into pensions, basic incomes, tax subsidies and social welfare that isn't matched by the production of goods and services. Creating money out of thin air and pumping it into a dysfunctional economy results in the complete destruction of the purchasing power of the existing money, e.g., Venezuela. The elite know that distributing 'free money' into the real economy will generate inflation, but the increases in the value of their assets have always outstripped the real-world inflation, so they don't care about inflation; which is for the 'little people' to worry about. In this way, entire countries are impoverished, such as in the Middle East and Africa. Another solution if they can get away with it; is to create a war, where the little people are driven off the land (e.g., Diego Garcia Atoll). In some African countries the impoverished have to hide under rocks to hide from the war planes after their houses have been burnt down, while the corporations plunder the natural resources. Again the little people and native populations suffer; who cares about a million families are thrown out of their homes? Most families are broken up, drown in the Mediterranean Sea, become refugees or are sold off into slavery in its many forms. The elites love 'democracy' because it ensures the disempowerment of the population. The fundamental flaw of democracy is that people have been deceived into surrendering their personal power of acting responsibly to elected 'representatives', who then turn around as powerless politicians and fearfully carry out the wishes of the elites who control them through the monetary system. Important issues of the day are simply ignored or rejected, while conservative 'scientific' warnings and media propaganda become just babble of the day and the fundamental failure of humanity.

Everything is an illusion, things are not always what they seem, history is fiction and we are all being turned into economic slaves by greed and money. This is the main way of the world, but the truth is only just getting across. The artificial system with its baseline culture of materialism is the reason most people still prefer to live out their entire lives in the false reality called the dreamtime. Most people don't realise how god made the world. They think they know, but for a start it is an illusion and events are designed for their spiritual progress. Nevertheless, many think they are acting based on the fact it is not an illusion. They think they are doing one thing, but in reality they have a soul that is being tested; such is the complexity of the world.

The Health System

There are two problems in the world: over-eating and under-eating. In New Zealand we belong to the over-eating group, because over half the population is overweight due to bad food. It is very difficult to avoid food laced with sugar, pesticides, fluoride, preservatives and colouration that break down into toxic chemicals and make people sick and prone to cancer. Sugar is the perfect poison because it works on the brain over a period of time (like fluoride) and causes diabetes in the body. Close the doors of a supermarket for 200 years and the food inside will be perfectly preserved except for the outside aisles.

Too much blood glucose results in skin infections, and also infections in the mouth, nose, lungs, throat, ears and eyes that become itchy because the body is trying to get rid of the excess sugar where there are fine capillaries. Bacteria and viruses invade these areas and the doctor will dish out antibiotics. However, as soon as the medicine has done its work there is reinfection due to the abundance of sugar in those areas. Without knowing it, you are actually assisting the bacteria and viruses to become antibiotic resistant faster than new antibiotics can be developed.

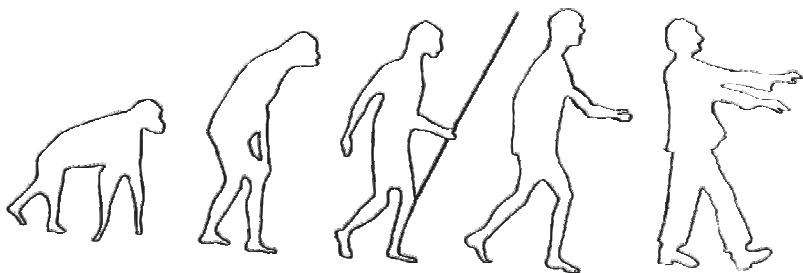

Materialistic societies are very stressful because money plays the dominant role in how people relate to each other and the food industry wants to make money out of it, so it favours overeating and violence to solve problems. And in a Fire-economy everyone wants to be in on the money if one sector is doing it, not just the Masters of the economy. The criminals are self-aware people who understand how the system works and have no respect for the Masters that make their 'fictional laws' to suit themselves, so gangs and drugs run rampant in Auckland to exploit the 'unaware' people who are the 'shadow dances' you find walking up Queen Street.

The pharmaceutical industry has infiltrated Medical Schools and teaches new doctors to dispense pills from America to cure the symptoms of these diseases. If they treated the cause they would go out of business. The doctors' surgeries are choked with sick people in Auckland these days. Antibiotics are handed out to patients like candy at a children's party and even fed to the animals that provide food, so men start growing breasts. At the same time television and newspapers have become stress builders, exposing the population to gratuitous violence and highly emotional situations in a one way communication system that heightens adrenalin levels. Television is there as a short break between commercials and the weather forecast exaggerates.

If they can't get the weather right how can they get the news right, and if they can't get the news right how are they going to get anything right because it's the main communication link of society done by the same kind of materialistic people. What do you do indoors these days but watch television and see the tragedy of the world falling to pieces around you. Adrenalin levels are very high after watching the All Blacks or Americas Cup; this takes a lot of heat off the politicians. People become nervous while watching the movies and like to eat something without thinking about what they are eating. Dealing with all these unnatural problems has caused the devolution of the species.

The Western diet will kill you, because it's based on sugar, preservatives, colouration and highly processed foods. Sugar is a cheap deadly poison combined with the unnatural stresses of modern life, and the medical industry does people more harm than good because it only cures the symptoms not the cause of disease and drugs have their side effects. In many ways we do not deserve to be called 'Homo sapiens' which means 'Wise Man'. The name 'Homo ignoramus' would be more appropriate as I once read in an Australian Newspaper in 2012.

In the 1980s, the sugar industry paid three Harvard scientists $50,000 to say that heart disease was most likely caused by saturated fat. After their report was published in JAMA, diets concentrated on low fat, which gained the endorsement of many health authorities.

"Oh yes, we have a pill to prevent heart attack too! It's called Warfarin!" Warfarin is rat poison, warfarin was discovered after a soldier in America tried to commit suicide with it, and it has serious side effects. Warfarin turns the biggest organ of the body; the skin, into 'tissue paper' and any little scratch will start bleeding. Same for the brain with high blood pressure when people are under stress and die with brain haemorrhage. Take the case of Ariel Sharon, who was one of Israel's most famous generals known for his bold tactics and occasionally refused to obey orders. As a politician he became known as 'the bulldozer', by the way he used to get things done. He was elected as Prime Minister in 2001. A stressful job like that took his attention away from his physical constitution and he suffered a small stroke in December 2005. He was put on warfarin. This eventually caused a severe brain haemorrhage in January 2006 resulting in a coma, where he remained in a long-term hospital care facility for eight years until his death in early 2014.

To prevent brain haemorrhage there is another pill used to lower blood pressure, but if you stand up too quickly you will feel dizzy, fizz out, or you might wake up in the morning with a numb arm or leg due to excess blood nutrients and low blood pressure. Sometimes amputation is a solution to that one, but people die after that because the cause is never addressed. You end up swallowing a diet of pills, the body is totally confused and can't regulate itself and you are told you are a very sick person. Alcohol confuses the liver. The problems are without end after you listen to and become totally dependent on the medical system, the pharmaceutical industry and pills from America. Doctors should take the time and provide all the necessary information that the patient needs to educate themselves, so they can be their own healers one day. They should be able to empower, mentor and inspire the patient, not make them dependent for life. The best way to monitor the thickness of the blood is to eat the correct foods like vegetables, kiwi fruit and a paleo diet in the right amounts with plenty of pure water and the body will do its job of monitoring its own blood thickness! In many cases it is best to go along with the doctors who are trying to treat the effects, while you work hard on the actual cause of the problem by doing your own thinking and listening to your own feelings. Once you learn to control your body you can learn how to control your mind. Fill yourself up with fun rather than food.

It's thus much better to go on a very strict diet for marginal diabetes, monitor your blood glucose levels and drink lots of water. One nurse said the cheapest way to find out if you are diabetic is to watch and see if ants will drink your urine, because ants love sugar.

Drinking lots of water out of the tap in Auckland brings another problem. In Auckland some of the water supply comes from The Waikato river, which has become like a sewer due to run off from the dairy industry that stresses the environment by trying to send excessive quantities of milk powder over to China. You wouldn't want to dip your toes in the Waikato river these days, so they have to filter the water and load it with chemicals to make it drinkable. The water supply contains a dangerous chemical called fluoride, which is a by-product of the aluminium smelting industry and atomic bomb production (uranium fluoride). Sodium fluoride is also a component of 1080 poison. Even the cows are starting to fall over with diseases these days. Fluoride was used in the water supply in German POW camps during WW2 to make the prisoners docile. It's much easier to control docile people. It has been used in New Zealand for about 60 years without being scientifically tested for its benefits to the teeth. There are no benefits!

Bad food means tooth decay. Amalgam fillings allow poisonous heavy metals to enter the body over time which affects the brain. Patients also get impacted teeth, and the dentist gives you two choices; either extraction or a root filling. They fail to mention the true cause and the third option: take a ten day course of antibiotics and wait for the tooth to settle. The cause of an impacted tooth is the combination of personal stress and high blood sugars, so during the settling down of the tooth a patient has to stay calm and avoid bad food. In 2008, at Leeds University in the United Kingdom, a fluid was discovered that when inserted into a cleaned out filling would form a network to allow the dentine to grow back over the hole in the tooth and repair it. Now, imagine if that got out into everyday use, the whole dental industry would collapse overnight, so the discovery had to be suppressed. People are very fearful of dentists and this fear goes into the psychosphere, the dentist then picks this up as stress. Dentists make a lot of money, but money has its price.

'Watercare', looks after the water purification problem in Auckland, and it has been put on the long arm of the Auckland SuperCity Council. In 2017 Oratia, West Auckland, they were going to build another water treatment plant to avoid the water in the polluted Waikato River, because West Auckland gets very high rainfall. They planned to bulldoze straight through 30 houses just to put in a large water pipeline. This would have involved destroying all those thirty family houses and those people's lives. There were protests everywhere and big signs to leave the families alone. You get the terrible feeling they were not going to listen to you no matter what, especially after they cancelled community meetings at the last minute. The council said they needed to boost the capacity of treated water to meet growth in northwest Auckland. This was probably true, but at the same time once the project was finished they would have sold off Watercare assets to foreign interests like they always have done. Does Watercare really care about the people they are supplying, or are they just another group of arrogant fat-cats looking after their own interests and greedy to make more money and bonuses for themselves like in America?

All sickness and medical problems are basically provoked by stress or stress related illness. Certainly the medical profession is very good at dealing with cuts and abrasions, fixing broken bones, and healing victims of car accidents and shark attack; but there are more serious issues. Medical researchers are told to design pills that do not cure the illness, but keep the patient just alive in a zombie-like state so they can return to buy more. This is the reason why doctor's waiting rooms these days are choked with sick people. As soon as the patient walks through the doctor's door, the doctor gets paid regardless of what is subscribed. The doctor never has to make the connection between a sore throat and excessive blood glucose levels, which is very sad. All they say is, "Next patient please."

Different people react to stress in different ways, but the effects of stress always attacks people at their weakest point. This can mean ending up in hospital with back pains, diabetes, a heart condition, vertigo, or the onset of cancer. Whatever the case, there is a pill to fix the problem and the medical profession trains doctors at university to become sales representatives for the American pharmaceutical companies who are really only treating the effects. After a while the medical profession starts to take control of your body, because you have not taken on the responsibility yourself.

Doctor Xandria Williams said, "I am one with my fate, and now I will see destiny. Every lifetime has a destiny, which only unfolds once you start to live it". She is a biochemist and physiologist who studies health and nutrition, and takes seriously the dictum "No Primum non nocere" or "First do no harm", which is part of the Hippocratic Oath that actually instructs "to abstain from doing harm". Thus she sees no rational or secure basis for treating diseases with toxic and harmful drugs when almost all health problems can be resolved by giving the body what it does need, and removing or protecting it from toxins and things it does not need.

According to Raluca Schachter of Garden Grove, California, most of today's doctors need to build a community not a business. Doctors in Auckland are preoccupied with paying off their first or second home mortgages, keeping their business to make fat profits first, and maintaining a good clientele of sick patients. They need to get away from glass buildings and lots of phones ringing around in grey rooms. But doctors are also watching fearfully over their shoulder at the questioning eye of Big Pharma with too many studies to read about how the latest drug was able to suppress a number of symptoms while generating others. Five to fifteen minutes at the most to write a subscription while looking at the next patient waiting in line ... 'next please!'

True healers should offer homemade food and practical advice on nutritional requirements. When sick people get out of hospital they need good support to put their lives back on track, but in Auckland there is only the ambulance waiting at the bottom of the cliff. Family and friends are too busy running around worshipping the money-god, and there are a lot of sick, lonely and dependent people relying on an uncaring medical system.

I asked my friend Peter after his recent visited to Queensland (April 2017), "What was your impression of the Australians?"

"It was full of false people with dead eyes chasing money and the Australian dream, which is more money. Their brains have been taken over by the spirit of the world, and they in turn have become a product of the system, while their life and their humanity have been sucked out of them."

"There is no dream Pete, just a piss puddle of greed and thirst for power spreading throughout the world," I replied.

There was dead silence for a while as Peter drew upon more memories, "Yes, Australia is full of people with dead eyes, big guts and fat wallets. They are ignorant and arrogant. It has changed considerably from how I knew it fifty years ago, and it's much worse. Though the supermarkets are cheaper there than in New Zealand, they have nevertheless been completely deceived and believe everything they are told. As I arrived back at Auckland Airport it was much the same story; mostly fat people with runny noses and in some cases, lice, thread-worms, boils; all after money, but poorer than the Aussie counterpart, because kiwis seem to survive more on a day-to-day basis by hanging on financially. John Key just got out in time when it was no longer possible to hide the economic deprivation going on throughout the social sectors of the economy like health, housing, education and rampant drug use in Auckland and Northland spiralling out of control."

"That's interesting!" I replied, "I know for a fact when you walk through the Henderson Mall, all the cafeterias are mostly full with over-fifty year-olds stuffing themselves with cakes, buns, biscuits and pies, because they are the only ones with money these days."

My 28-year-old son Zach returned from Hawaii in mid-February 2018, and I took the opportunity to ask him what America was like? He replied, "Hawaii is one of the best American States to visit, but there is a large population of homeless there too. These people are just forgotten about. On the main street you see all the high class shops and fashion stores, while the homeless just hang around on the street outside. The average Americans are real fat and unhealthy, and literally walk around like zombies ... you can see it in their eyes ... and you can feel it in their demeanour. Also, if you get between America and its money you have a big problem, which is how Kim Dotcom got caught in the spider's web."

New Zealand society is like a soup. The ingredients of the 'soup' are made up of all different types of people, but they are under constant pressure and stress. Once the heat goes on after each 'decade of crisis' the scum eventually rises to the top, and eventually ends up controlling the social strata below it. With any good soup or society, if the scum is not removed the soup turns bad, and in a society it limits the goodness it can aspire to. Where can a society go when it's based on falsity and the monetary system? The further you get away from this truth the more society deteriorates, decade after decade.

Consequently, people don't seem to have much ambition in Auckland and many other cities and towns around the country, because the system has turned them into materialists and taken their spirituality away. People are not really social anymore, they have lost their enthusiasm for life and they have become unhealthy.

It is a remarkable paradox that at the pinnacle of human material and technical achievement most people in Auckland still find themselves anxiety-ridden, prone to depression, worried about how others see them, unsure of their friendships, driven to consume and with little or no community life.

Lacking the relaxed social contact and emotional satisfaction we all need, we seek food-comfort, over-eating, obsessive shopping or become prey to hours of television, excessive alcohol, pills and psychoactive medicines and illegal drugs.

How is it we have created so much mental and emotional suffering despite levels of wealth and comfort unprecedented in human history? The problem now is we are under pressure from 'the System', and we talk as if our lives were a constant battle for psychological survival, a struggle against stress and emotional exhaustion. So we must ask the question, 'Has materialism and consumerism gone too far and thrown our lifestyles off balance?'

The New Awakening

It has become a big shock for many people to be told how bad the world really is, and it is understandable that many people in their anxiety go into a state of denial. Others feel numb with shock and hopelessness because they feel powerless to do anything about the terrible crimes committed against humanity occurring around the world. People prefer to believe what they are familiar with; the consensus reality; but then again they have never tested their beliefs. Many on the other hand around the world are starting to do just that; starting to question their consensus reality on a daily basis, and this has resulted in what is called the awakening. The awakening is a big threat to the masters of the economy should the truth ever be allowed to break out. The problem is the top echelons of society who indoctrinate us, are above the law under the current legal system.

The Seven Truths

The Seven Truths are represented by the seven-pointed star, or heptogram, which in turn is derived from the small white concentric circle in the above pictogram, which may be described as follows:

The Seven Truths

1. Your only wealth is your health.
2. Believe in and practice the four goods: Good food, good exercise, good fun and good lifestyle.
3. Eat slowly, water only, eat simple, think little, meditate much, love always, and once said cannot be unsaid.
4. True Knowledge (TOE) brings true happiness, but you need to walk the theory in everyday life because knowledge is a state of being.
5. In this way you can walk in paradise now because all is in the mind, where your feelings tell you everything.
6. True freedom is without a monetary system. You worship the material system and its 'money-god' by your actions.
7. Never in the annals of history have so many been deceived by so few. The System is based on falsity, lies and illusory hope. It will crash soon. Behind The System and exact opposite of The System is god.

A New Society

One of the most exciting developments is the new economic models surfacing worldwide. This is a totally new system that turns the old capitalist system of competition into a collaboration, and it is known as Contributionism. Its basic philosophy is defined as follows, 'Delete the elite, rid money and become one with the One'. If the monetary system can be eliminated the elite would by definition automatically go with it and so would materialism. All our big theories like capitalism, evolution and the big bang in turn are all linked to and support materialism. These would all have to be replaced by non-material and currently suppressed theories like the Theory of Soul, the Social Contract and the Theory of Everything; because Contributionism is a society of love. It is a much deeper understanding of nature and worship, because people worship through their actions not their words. However, in realistic terms nature will have to take its course and the monetary system will not go until the crash of civilisation.

Contributionism is the universal right for any group of people to enjoy the fruits of their own labours without interference from any other system. It is the fundamental right of any community to work together in a village where there is no use for money or enslavement; in order to create communities, towns, cities, countries and lives overflowing with food and abundance; arts, music, advanced technology and transport, health, housing, sport, leisure and an infinite variety of social goodness, this will be the birth of what is also termed 'an advanced civilisation'.

Some of the latest innovations in self-watering gardens for growing vegetables and exchanging produce has been happening in West Auckland since about 2015, all run by the power of community members and school groups. Then there is the 'Kai Auckland Project' started by Steve Tollestrup and the author, on Mountain Road in Henderson Valley, West Auckland in 2017. The project takes a few years to establish and began by planting fruit and nut trees along the roadside to provide food for the school children who walk to school. Other areas in Auckland have also started up. The aim is to allow the Kai-Auckland project to eventually spread throughout the rest of the country.

Another example led by Michael Tellinger is called the 'Ubuntu Liberation Movement'. In its first stage it is known as 'The-One Small Town Initiative', which is to create food and income generating projects within a community in Africa, all run by the power of its own community members, where funds are funnelled back into more produce and income generating projects, until eventually the town is self-sustaining, self-sufficient and generating a sizable income through external sales. ## The Love Society

People wake up every day and are no longer happy with their lot in life. What they are required to do on one level in their lives does not tally at a deeper level with their conscience. They are no longer happy with the answers their authorities or governments are giving them and our banks are giving us. They are fearful and they are not happy in the long term. These feelings are constantly niggling away in the mind, because they know they are in some kind of bondage. People want to ask new questions they were too afraid to ask the day before, because with so much new knowledge around we are living in the true age of enlightenment. It is the new golden age we will reach and enter as predicted by the ancients. We are the people who have this new information that will take us into this awakening moment. We are beginning to realise we are all born free on our planet, but we cannot move around freely, we have to follow rules and laws that we did not agree to, we have to work to save and pay taxes. None of us agreed when we were born we had to become a citizen with a number and we realise we have become enslaved in a system that is so dark, so brutal and so convoluted that when we discover it, many of us refuse to believe it. Never before has slavery been so prevalent as in this 21st Century, and never before have so many millions of families been thrown out of their own homes and also sold into sex slavery or just plain slavery around the world.

The lies, the falsity, the deceit and the misconceptions started in primary school; because we only know what they wanted us to know; we were made to live in their world and money drove our education. We were taught to count to ten and then onto the multiplication tables as if numbers only have quantity value. In this way we were forced into accepting the vulgarity of money. But counting to ten is a fundamental lie, because quantity is materialistic. Numbers were there as part of the creation of the universe, which was done with quality number values and intelligence, which is the basis of the Theory of Everything. However, the basis of the education system is the spiritual tendency to trust and listen to them, and not cause too much trouble. They have abused the most basic social human quality of all – cooperation, because to cooperate you have to trust them and as a result we have been dumbed down by knowledge suppression. Where can a civilisation go when it's based on these kinds of lies?

We are a species with amnesia. The first thing was to disconnect us from our ancestors, and they started to teach a whole new history. This has been the great human puzzle of who are we? Where do we come from? And why are we here? All of us have asked these questions at some stage in our lives. The fact that we cannot answer these questions immediately points to the fact we are a species of amnesia. Clearly, the murky sea of disinformation that surrounds us has turned us into a Homo ignoramus. How they did this is what the conquistadors did in the Americas and the English did to the Maori. All the native countries around the world were invaded, and the people were severed from their ancestors. Their books and their knowledge were replaced by other books like the Bible. They were taught a whole new history of who they were and where they came from to create the great amnesia.

The royal blood lines were appointed by the 'gods' to rule over humanity for thousands of years. They created money, which was maliciously introduced as a tool of enslavement. It did not evolve out of barter and trade as they claim. As long as they can set it alongside our evolution from the apes we think we need money to survive. This is another of the biggest lies we have been told. The temples to the gods were the first banks. Banks create money out of thin air, and that is the reason we are in deep trouble today. The central bank does not belong to the people; it belongs to private interests that are the elite. Our laws and judiciary have nothing to do with upholding the rights of the people, but instead uphold the rights of the corporations and institutions that have been put in place by the elite to enslave us.

We have to find a new system. Our system was made by capitalists for capitalists and now it is broken and it cannot be fixed. The only solution is to get rid of the monetary system ... remove it entirely. As long as we have money there will always be corrupt people who will manipulate others, control others and abuse others. Corruption goes very much deeper than has ever been exposed, while the interests of the satanic and narco-traffickers run to the highest levels you can imagine. As long as we have money in our lives and in our society we will have corruption, violence and wars. It corrupts the people; it corrupts the system, it corrupts our souls and our integrity. But the moment you remove money from the system you disband the elite, and you delete the elite, because they have no more power left in their artificial lives. The elite live in constant fear of this truth, and it's up to the people to take the truth to them!

In a world without money there is no more crime, because the first criminals invented money in the first place as a crime against humanity; first you drive a society into polarisation, then organised crime will take root and grow out of the poor, and crime cannot continue to exist without institutional support.

In a world without money there are no obstacles to social progress, because people start working together, and working in cooperation with each other for the greater benefit of all. Contributionism means no money, no barter or trade, no value attached to material things and everyone contributes their own skills for the greater benefit of all society. It's that simple; we cannot go wrong because that is the way we have been living for millions of years including during the last Ice Age. How would we survive if there were an Ice Age now? Contributionism is a system already designed by nature for the best outcome for everyone. It is a self-correcting system, not a construct of humanity that suppresses the advanced technology and keeps humanity enslaved. Scientists will be free to advance their theories without fear of ridicule or career loss. Slowly we can get away from the thinking that money does everything; it does nothing. Money gets in the way of what people do, what people are good at and what people are allowed to do. Currently the opposite; economic slaves are paid money to do what they do not want to do, they have to keep working constantly on repetitive and specialised jobs, eventually becoming mentally and physically sick without the free time and variety that nature would otherwise have provided.

Conversations

One day (29/1/2017), a woman came up to the author and said, "I'm not happy Ross. I never have want for money because my husband is a housing developer. I have two daughters and I have been brought up in the Muslim religion and that's all I know, but still I'm not happy?" Then she beckoned for me to come and sit down.

I replied, "Family brings happiness, not money! You have two daughters and the married one is going to bring a child into this world soon, that is the most important thing, and that's where you will find it. Also, if you are so bored with little to do and fewer family responsibilities, you could achieve the enlightenment. Anyone can do it, and it's easier than getting a degree at university!"

After a pause I continued, "But lady, I feel sorry for your husband; he is filthy rich, overweight, in his mid-forties and losing both his hearing and eye sight. Luckily he hasn't lost his marbles yet. He has obviously been deceived by materialism, and 'deception' means you are unaware of what is happening to you."

"Most people do not actually realise what is happening to them. Over the past two years for example, the volume of traffic in Auckland has increased considerably, as reported by overseas visitors I have spoken to, but you don't notice the 'creep in volume' so much yourself if you live here; and like in Australia sales people are becoming rude to anyone appearing different. Cars are also cheap; my son Zach recently bought a Nissan Bluebird for $200, and there was very little wrong with it. All this means people are running around like crazy, business is booming for the cops, and over time I have seen so many baby boomers and close friends over 65 lose their 'marbles' because of it. There is too much pressure on the human brain these days in this giant money-machine called Auckland. There are two ex-mayors of Auckland I have known for a long time including one I went to university with, but unfortunately materialism has set their minds like concrete, and as a consequence their minds have become shattered. Glory, Gold, Girls and false-Gods have had their price over the years; it's better to live a quiet, simple life and go for the fourth 'G', which is god or in my books I call 'the One'."

Then the woman said, "Are you happy Ross?"

I said, "It is always a struggle living in West Auckland; but Yes, because I can escape from this world in the mind. But also struggle brings happiness, and knowing the truth behind this world also helps. The ancient Greeks used to say, 'Per aspera ad astra' which means 'for adversity under the stars.' Finding out who you are and why you are here is part of this process. You have to understand the system and how it works before you can understand what is really behind the system and right in the background."

There is a lot of stress in the world now, which makes people unhappy. So people have to get rid of their stress somehow, and they over indulge in eating, drinking and drugs to name a few, which only brings more health problems. Because of these social pressures a lot of Americans, for example are overweight because their freedoms have been taken away and the place is run by both the 'Deep State' and 'Military-Industrial complex' who compete against each other. The two main parties, Democrat and Republican, are just two horns of the same beast, and (under President Trump the Military/Industrial Complex has the upper hand) [this paragraph was added into the conversation afterwards in March 2018].

"What is life?" She asked.

"Life is simply everything ... there is nothing that is actually dead." I replied.

"Do you really think there is a god; what is god anyway?" She asked, being very direct and looking around to make sure no one was listening.

"God is an incredible ball of white light that no religion can explain, and more beautiful than the Sun. God lives in a highly potent universe with highly spiritual beings there, even beyond the spirit world we would call heaven, and this pi-universe has four of its own super dimensions; such that all god has to do is think, and god can create.

"The best religion is truth." I continued. "Literally truth is a religion in itself and the basis of any religion. Its first principle is belief in god. Its second is honesty in everyday life, and thirdly good thinking. Truth is only visible to those who are able to question everything they have been taught to believe. It doesn't have to be a propaganda document. If you can make it into such a spiritual world, you have genius ability, and New Zealand has one of the highest proportion of genius populations in the world; but the system tries to suppress most of it."

After that the woman took off! She was late for an eye appointment. The short conversation we had in the Henderson Mall that day in January of 2017 was just a chance meeting with an extended family member whom one meets from time to time; but I bumped into the same woman five months later at an extended family gathering we were having at one of the Henderson Coffee Clubs, some members coming all the way from the Australian outback. At the end of the gathering she came straight up to me and said, "Ross, will you read my hand?"

This lady liked to put me under some pressure for answers, perhaps she knew I was a writer, but it demonstrated the closed lifestyle she was living at the time because she always wore a face veil. I replied, "Sure, anytime." And as we sat down I told her I did not want to read at the Club because once too many people find out what you're doing you can end up having to read everyone's palm, especially the ladies, and it puts you under stress. Sometimes I do not mind, but generally people have a great need to feel connected to the spiritual world. I also told her that it was better to read a hand with my daughter Nadia present, because she is also a prophetess and we work together as a team effort for the best readings and results. In this way, we can tell people much more about their life.

I already knew the woman was not the everyday run of the mill type, by the questions she had asked and the problems she was having in her immediate family. She put her right hand on the table, and first I examined the relative length of the fingers and their shape. As the hand has been designed on the exact lines and energy flow of the universal energy, you can find the structure of the entire universe in it, just as in the face of a person; because souls print both palms and faces. There are one hundred and twenty basic human personality forces according to the 120 fundamental material TOE forces in the physical universe, and also according to the physiognomy of the hand. Her personality turned out to be Pluto/passive Addition, which means this person always needs adversity to bring out the best in them. The interaction between Pluto and passive addition (Cancer the crab), tends to bring out strongly the resistance and danger components in Pluto.

Then I asked her to turn her hand over to the back so I could examine the four main lines. These were unusually well-formed. She was obviously a well-developed and balanced soul.

Examining the secondary lines, and putting

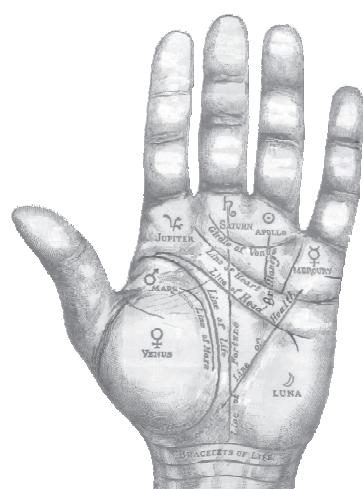

Diagram showing

everything together in the final analysis I said to her, "You have a well formed intuition line just inside the Health line on Mercury (below the little-finger) that extends even below the Heart line, showing you are in contact with the subconscious, which is extremely rare and shows you are at the Neptune genius level of consciousness. This is a very high level of genius nicknamed the 'G-genius'. Alexander the Great was a G-genius, Douglas Bader the WW2 flying ace that saved Britain was a G-genius, and they are very rare people. Once you learn to follow your own feelings and overcome the oppression that is around you, there will be no stopping you. You also have a straight, well-formed Apollo line (below the wedding ring finger); also quite rare, which shows your life will result in outstanding success.

"What all this means is you are actually a spiritual person that already has great knowledge about life, so don't allow materialistic people to cast their shadows upon you. It doesn't matter how much darkness there is, your light will shine through; and you will help restore your sick husband to normal health because sickness starts in the mind and the body follows the mind. I have noticed that you sometimes sit alone at these extended family gatherings, so you must stand up and meet the challenges that life brings with your new knowledge to do what is right for your family. In this way your already beautiful family will become more united and your soul will feel less tormented."

Michael Jackson said in his last performance before he died, "If you want to make a better world, have a look at the person in the mirror. Heal the world. Make a little space. Make it a better place. Heal the world we live in, and save it for our children."

"There are lines on your hand that show a complete record of your destiny in this life and at even the age in your life when certain events will occur, such as your marriage and important relationships. The truth is, for many people such as yourself, just go with the flow and enjoy your life as it unfolds because your destiny is already planned. Don't let materialism drown you, or sell your soul to the devil. Your feelings are the most important thing; always listen to them and they will get stronger, which means less brain work on your part. Life is very short. One hundred years goes by faster the older you get, and we are trying to get back to our original true home in heaven. Life on this Earth is a test for you. Before you were born you chose the family you wanted to be born into and the people you were going to have serious relationships with for your best spiritual development. However, about the time just before your birth you drank from the 'waters' of forgetfulness when inside your mother's tummy and now you are just living in the dreamtime. Heaven is an extremely crowded place with lots of lovely people; but sometimes it is necessary to make the sacrifice to come down to this physical plane and help friends, so it is a waste of a life to run after the Money-god, especially being born in paradisiacal New Zealand and then dumped into Auckland."

"What do you think of Islam? She asked, probably because this had a bearing on her problem also.

"Islam and Christianity belong to the 'book-type' religions that have sprung up only comparatively recently. Having just read a book by Harry Richardson called, 'The Story of Mohammed: Islam unveiled', these two 'religions' are based on a propaganda document and politics, just as today pseudo-religions are based on 'science, money and politics'. The religious elite have never answered the fundamental question that their religion originally was set up to answer, which is the truth, the fundamental oneness of the universe and knowledge of god; Instead, the purpose of a pseudo-religion is to obscure the truth so people cannot see god anymore, and to create a barrier that replaces god with materialism. Religions are hollow words with a political agenda to control people. People become confused on an ideological level, which immediately gives socio-political power to an elite priesthood that justifies their materialism.

"There are three things you cannot hide; the Sun, the Moon and the Truth. You might be able to hide the Truth for just over a thousand years, two thousand, eleven thousand or even twenty-two thousand, but eventually it will come out in all its glory! Now is the time!

"More specifically though at this stage, Islam is an exclusive religion that favours men. In this way, men feel a great camaraderie with each other through the religion; but one thing I do know, god put men and woman on this Earth to be equal with each other. You should not submit to men, only to god. To insist women veil themselves in the modern age is to take away their human rights. But these problems, like materialism itself, are never discussed because the elite and priesthood alike are always happy with the way things are, and with the social control they exert as part of their politico-religious will. The problem is, children are taught to believe everything they are told and when they become adults never start asking questions. Karl Marx once said, 'Give me the boy until aged seven, and I'll give you the man!'

"God allows these dark clouds to form and the truth to be obscured; so that people will gain knowledge and remember the truth again."

I said to the woman showing her a picture (shown below), "Where religions might fail, this is a photograph of the Kingdom of Heaven ... and this is what's waiting for you once you achieve the enlightenment!"

"It is a photograph of a crop circle taken in England about 2012, and shows that the

Crop circle: The Kingdom of Heaven

Kingdom of Heaven is composed of three parts representing the three universes. The bottom half shows a city floating in the 'air' that represents the passive universe, and the circle above it is the pi-universe. Hanging by threads of 'light' underneath the city are 'water' droplets representing the 'ocean of nothingness', from which the active universe has been created.

"The active universe is a precarious watery world where wave vibrations making up the universal energy (a form of light), turn into solid matter and the people are its shadow dancers, like fish in a fish-bowl that only see reflections of themselves because they are living in the dreamtime. The real world is the floating city, composed of a form of frozen 'light' where the soul becomes a body form. It is a very crowded place with many civilisations and cultures present, and whose people are friendly and pleasant natured. There are bright lights above the city on towers emanating abundant universal energy from the city itself, so the souls do not need to eat food as we do to sustain the body.

"Above this city is the far larger pi-universe, consisting of the diamond-shaped One or god at its centre, which means god lives in a state of non-material being and is the supreme sparkling soul. To its left and right are two diamond shaped 'lights', each representing the twin dimensions of time and the twin dimensions of space that compose the pi-universe, also forming the circumference of the circle. Above the diamond is a representation of the magic of the One, and below is love. This crop circle was created for humanity by one of the gods living within the floating city."

The next question came as rather a surprise, "Ross, would you be good enough to have a talk to my husband about his sickness?"

I replied, "Lady, I can't fight your battles for you! You are around him all the time and our paths hardly cross."

"But Ross, he won't listen to me, and my husband has great admiration for you because he has never forgotten how his father once asked you to bring him out to New Zealand as an eighteen-year-old after the Fiji Coup to give him a future. Then you walked him down the stairway of the plane and straight into a job that same day. He has never looked back since those days or forgotten what you did for him."

"I didn't know he thought of me that way; however I feel he won't listen to me either, we have completely different interests; he is into money, I'm into knowledge, and they are completely different things. I helped bring a lot of his family out to New Zealand and married into the family myself because I thought they would be non-materialistic and we could live the ideal communal lifestyle, instead they betrayed that ideal and have become more materialistic than even the Aucklanders here, which has been very disappointing.

"Your husband is very well known and highly respected in the West Auckland Muslim community. I was really blown away by the lavish wedding he arranged for your eldest daughter last year at a phenomenal cost; besides, I don't want to cause any trouble in the family, there has been enough already. People have to try to work out things for themselves and they become offended if you tell them. If they won't listen to those closest to them and get sick, they only have themselves to blame!"

"I have noticed generally that a lot of materialists are 'nay-sayers', they throw their own problems back at you, they don't believe anything much non-material, and they like the solid evidence put right in front of them on a plate before they will believe. This is fair enough, because there are a lot of quacks, criminals and rip-off artists out there now. However, and at the same time if materialists don't do their own thinking, how will they ever advance and get to know the truth?"

Meanwhile a few days later it was Sunday morning, my wife was outside in the garden when she happened to notice a man placing cards in letterboxes. The cards were advertising a steep bush section for sale close-by with an asking price of $300,000 ($300K), and a GV of $100K. Sections in West Auckland go for at least $500K. My wife knew the woman's husband better than I did, so she rang him and the couple came over within the hour for tea and scones to look at the section. The husband ended up offering $150K cash, but didn't really like bush sections, preferring more the built-up housing estates closer to Henderson and eventually offered $450K for one of those, but didn't get that either.

However, as soon as the woman came in the house and sat down she said, "I get a very peaceful feeling here."

I replied, "That's strange, because everyone that comes here seems to say the same thing." With her husband present it gave an ideal opportunity to discuss the problem the woman was having.

As they were leaving the husband called out from his car, "We only live once Rossie, so we might as well eat what we like!"

"Well wouldn't that be the very reason to try and live for a lot longer ... don't pander to the propaganda, and you need to kill the pill, address the stress, control the diet and exercise to realise what Auckland is doing to you!" I replied.

The moral of this story is we cannot always work out our own problems or rely on others for help, life is very busy, but also short and filled with uncertainty; but situations will often arise in our favour by allowing us to solve all these problems with faith.

When Auckland Was a Love Society in the 1950s

The 'L' letter inside a circle shown above stands for the word 'love'. Love is when compassion pervades society. And it flourishes when knowledge flows free in the transparent society, as the furrow also follows free. There are different types of love and the social love being referred to here is a more unified and compassionate attitude within society than what we are experiencing currently. This social compassion works towards achieving less material goals and tends to be more people oriented, including helping others, giving others one's time and above all generosity.

1950s Auckland

A balloon is full of air, the heart is full of love.

In the decade-and-a-half leading up to 1950, love was strong passion; a barely controllable emotion, perhaps more family oriented, and consequently lead to the post-war baby boom.

At the same time there was a resolve to fix an outstanding housing crisis. From 1935, the first Labour Government (1935-1949) lead by Prime Minister Michael Joseph Savage pioneered an ambitious housing campaign and built 29,000 state houses. And by 1950, New Zealand was the third wealthiest country on Earth after Switzerland and the United States with virtually no unemployment or homelessness.

Michael Joseph Savage nationalised the Mortgage Corporation and offered low interests housing loans, and Fletchers obtained the platform to become one of the largest construction companies that increased social housing and affordability for all New Zealanders. From that massive investment by the Savage Government into the private sector the housing problem was properly regulated and completely solved.

Back in those wonderful times growing up as a teenager during the 1950s Auckland was the city of opportunities, and love and good will to all men and women were very much part of our society. People were much more social then, always there was an endless string of parties because television or supermarkets didn't exist and there were few queues, you could pick up a job just like that and money seemed to flow like water - now it's down to a trickle. Unemployment was unheard of and there was a limited range of labour saving appliances. People took life quietly and there was ample time to think.

The 1960s saw the Rock & Roll era and music became our 'food'. There were very few fat people. It saw Hippies and Flower Power with people setting up their own communities especially on Great Kauri Island (the Barrier). There was a lot of freedom and easy movement. One of the songs I feel that defined this era was called 'Happy Together' by the Turtles. We listened to Elvis, The Beatles, The Who, The Beach Boys, Janis Joplin (1943-1970) but by the 1970s music had become more theatrical. It was a period of celebration and the young generation even wanted to make a new society. The teenage baby-boomer love expanded during the 60s.

We had our sports heroes as well, like Don Clark who could kick a rugby ball over the goal posts from his own 25 with no props. There was Murray Halberg and Peter Snell in athletics, and Sir Edmund Hillary who climbed Mount Everest, the tallest mountain in the world.

In art too, the era of love brought Abstract Expressionism and Modernism, it became an institution with its own ideals and values. People believed art could be used to manipulate and transform society, and provide its spiritual goals.

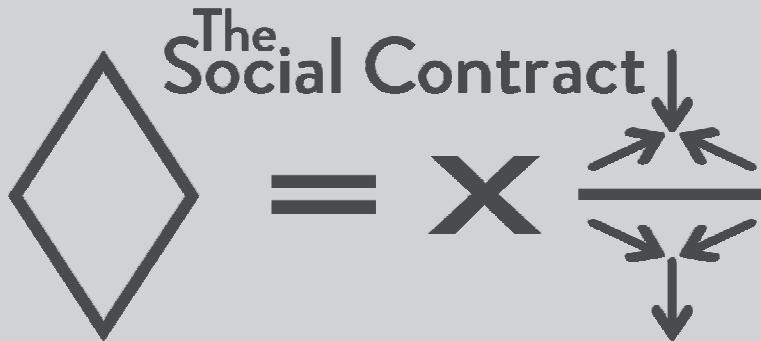

However, this materialism was balanced with a transparent knowledge system. Business people worked together better with the same camaraderie they had during the war years. Profits were shared more and benefited the people because Auckland society was more unified then.

The problem is when you have an equal, free and better society like that included village life and communes where people like to make their own rules such as they did on Great Kauri Island for example, authority and bureaucracy always intercedes to foil the attempts because of power hungry and greedy people who want to exploit the masses. If corruption is discovered in an institution like the SuperCity now the police never go in and pull it apart like they did to the communes back then. And that was how we ended up with the Auckland of 2020.

However, Auckland of 2020 is socially a completely different reality, especially for the millennials. The kids of today just stay in front of screens, have black rings around their eyes, don't clean their teeth and many will grow to become the criminals of tomorrow, because money is their god.

There are more cell phones in New Zealand than people now. Four-year-olds are using them and some are more proficient than many baby-boomers. My son Zach tells me the millennials get all their information from cell phones now, which are connected to all their friends, friends of friends and the world through the internet, Facebook and email etc. People spend most of their time staring at cell phones. If there is trouble somewhere in the world it will be on cell phones from the people on the spot even before the news outlets get hold of it. There are a lot of hackers doing the same thing, so it is more difficult to conceal information about important events that happen, but there is good and bad in everything. Government created Facebook and the social media in general as a surveillance tool to monitor the lives and locations of the population. But the people are beginning to wake up and change the game to start a global revolution of empowerment to take back control of their collective destiny.

The Social Contract

The Social Contract is a definition of the human experience, which is based on love and understanding. It also involves the forces of human nature or thought, and may be defined as:

Every way is the right way in its own sense

This is a true statement because 'every way' cannot be the wrong way. 'Every way' means without limits, 'right way' means the goodness society can aspire to, and 'own sense' means distinguishing between truth and falsity and the good and bad.

The Social Contract can be expressed as an equation, as represented by the diamond symbol. On the right-hand side are the opposite forces of materialism indicated by the outward arrows and non-materialism by inward arrows. The relationship between these social forces is multiplication; which creates new possibilities, but brings cumulative and inconsistent changes. If non-materialism is suppressed; then Strife, Falsity and Ignorance will dominate society. If materialism can be controlled; then Love, Truth and Knowledge will increase and can dominate over society.

The Social Contract works if, and only if, the following axioms apply:

1. There have to be people. The minimum is two for a society and a thousand for a civilisation
2. Everyone has to contribute because people are carriers of thought and give readings of thought
3. People contribute through knowledge because people read their own thoughts, exercise free-will in accordance with their state of knowledge, and the more knowledge people have the greater their contribution to society. Knowledge is a state of being.
4. Every person needs to be a leader in their own right, which guarantees recognition of an individual's contribution to society. There also needs to be a spiritual leader
5. Rules. It is self-evident that society works by the rules of co-operation, faith and trust.

The Social Contract is a sacred covenant between god and the people, where the diamond gives origin to seven state cycles of which the SEC is given as an example.

The One [One-pi] is the light, Zero-pi is the night [no-light] or institutions set-up amongst the people and the Diamond is the Social Contract or psycho-sphere, which creates Socio-economic cycles.

This second equation is the same as the topmost equation except it has been reversed with approximations. Notice how the sparkling diamond on the left hand side in the top equation is now on the right in the bottom equation giving out its universal energy and creating seven state cycles of which only one is given as an example here.

The new society will put God first and people will live in accordance with the One and nature, because everything has been created and is owned by God.

Knowledge, love and generosity will be valued more than materialism. The present top-down society is controlled by the 1% elite through their monetary system, so to delete the elite it is necessary to achieve the new knowledge-based and bottom-up society for 99% of the people; this is called democracy or people-power.

Money and greed should not separate the land either because it is one. The products of the land will be shared freely.

Communities of a knowledge and contributionalist society are the way to achieve great things. The purpose of human life is to reach heaven because it is paradise and the true home of the soul.

Just as Auckland once was the city of opportunities, so did ancient Greece once have a thriving civilisation and the free flow of knowledge. Consequently, Western Civilisation was based upon a lot of the knowledge the ancient Greeks found out about life; take for example, Empedocles, Aristotle and their Theory of Soul.

Empedocles (495-444BC)

The ancient Greek philosopher Empedocles was the first to state a principle now central to all physics. He explained all motion or change of place as the interpenetration of particles. His theory of the physics removed the traditional distinctions between life as matter, from that of plants, animals, humans and the gods. The soul too, was seen by Empedocles, of necessity to take on a variety of forms. The soul accomplished this by transmigration until its eventual return, in love to the gods. This final event was seen as a re-joining with the immortals at their feasts.

He also stated two-and-a-half thousand years ago that there were two divine powers called 'love and strife', which were attractive and repulsive forces respectively. These two forces wax and wane their dominance over each other, but at the same time neither force wholly disappears from the imposition of the other.

He recognised that love and strife rule the four elements. Love brings harmony, it brings happiness and its attractive force pulls everything towards a spiritual unity. Strife is hate, fear and discord; it brings fear, knowledge suppression, misery and disunity through arguing and evil doing. It is the state of greatest unrest and movement, so motion increases under strife.

When someone loves you that is the purpose of life; when a god (spiritual guide) loves you, you are feasting at the table of the gods; nothing else matters besides love. Love is conveyed through the universal energy, which means we are all spiritual beings of love. The important thing is to stay true to that love; because it is not only feelings and emotions, it matures into its true definition, which is doing things for others with knowledge. Love goes from one form to another, and in between it helps you grow as a person or a society as a civilisation.

If someone loves you it doesn't mean you should cut yourself off from the rest of the world and its problems because then it is only a selfish type of love. Real love expands; it does not contract like strife.

We who are loved need to do something about the world's tribulations. Once it takes root, love is something that needs to grow with practical experience. In other words, love is closely related with knowledge and the people who have the knowledge are the only ones going to solve the problems, because some people think problems can be solved with money. They are wrong.

Empedocles stated there was a time before civilisation when humans lived close to and at one with nature when the two powers of love and strife co-existed in a condition of rest and inertness in the form of a sphere.

According to Empedocles, at this time before civilisation the two elements existed together in their purity, without mixture or separation; and the attractive power of love predominated socially within the sphere, while the separating power of strife guarded the extreme edges of the sphere in its contact with nature, which was when humans once lived close to the animals and in a paradisiacal state. Since those times however, strife has gained more sway and the bond that kept the elements pure within the sphere dissolved. This caused environmental pollution.

The two elements became the society we see today and understand in Auckland and what Empedocles understood of society in his day; which was full of contrasts and oppositions where strife has taken over its dominant role, where love has been banned to the outer perimeter and the sphere itself became the central embodiment of pure existence.

What Empedocles understood the sphere to be encompassed all. According to this model, the sphere then shrunk in size, which is equivalent to the large dot at the centre of the pictogram shown at the beginning of this chapter. As the sphere became smaller and shrunk in size, it also took love with it. Love then became the concentric circle surrounding the large dot shown in the same pictogram.

The large dot in the centre of the pictograph represents the creator, which illustrates how during this period of strife humans cut themselves off from god, which the ancient Greeks knew as 'The One'. However, we are now coming to understand Empedocles' sphere is the universal energy from which all things are made, and in the social context it is called the psycho-sphere that surrounds the seven-pointed star in the square pictogram. But all hope is not lost for those people who currently engage with the inner sphere while doing regular meditation, for they will see the spiritual light. Those dedicated individuals are able to see the sphere in their 'mind's eye', because the sphere lives within us all!

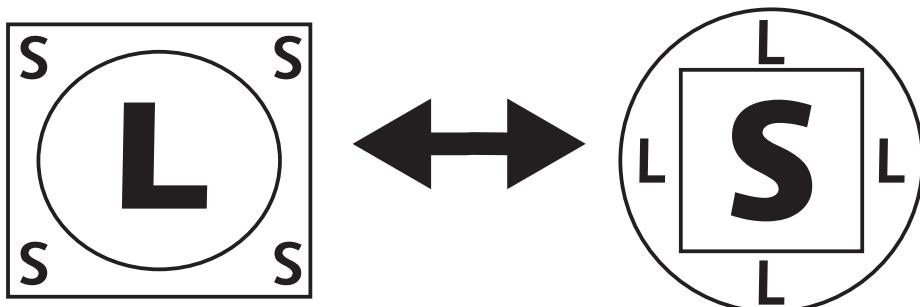

Diagram showing the Empedocles' Love ↔ Strife cycle

The diagram above illustrates the love and strife cycle of Empedocles: where on the left the dominant symbol 'L' representing love is enclosed by a circle, and on the right the dominant symbol 'S' representing strife is enclosed by a square. Between the two dominant symbols is a double ended arrow sign representing the interchangeability between the two forces as part of a cycle. Outside the dominant symbols are their opposite and recessive forces, together representing the psychosphere, in which a social system undergoes cyclical changes.

The psychosphere on the left where love is the more dominant social force represents Auckland around 1950, and the psychosphere on the right in which strife is dominant represents Auckland around the year 2020. The Auckland psychosphere always alternates between these two conditions, because prior to the 1950-love there was another short but deep strife period triggered by the 1929 share market crash that hit Auckland centred on the year 1930.

In May 2018, at the wedding of Prince Harry and Meghan the Most Reverend Bishop Michael Curry from America gave a sermon on love, and quoted the late American activist Martin Luther King saying, "We must discover the power of love, the redemptive power of love; and when we do that, we will make of this old world a new one." Then speaking directly to the couple he said (perhaps remembering Lady Diana), "There's power in love. Love can help and heal when nothing else can. Love can lift up and liberate for living when nothing else will. And the love that brings two people together is the same love that can bind them together; whether on mountain tops of happiness and through valleys of hardship." The Bishop went on to say, "Imagine our world when love is the way. No child would go to bed hungry in such a world as that. Poverty would become history in such a world as that. The Earth would be as a sanctuary in such a world as that."

The problem is you have to live love, it is a social experience and it has to become part of the lifestyle of society itself. Martin Luther King Jn brought a lot of unity to Black Americans, especially with his, 'I have a dream' speech. The Deep State didn't like that because it was too close to the 'bone' for them. The bone of love; the dog of strife.

Aristotle (384-322BC)

The ancient Greek philosopher Aristotle wrote the 'de Anima', which means 'On the Soul'. From the word Anima we derive the word 'animate' and 'animal'. In other words, it was taken as self-evident that it was the soul alone that animates humans and living creatures.

Aristotle's father was the physician to King Philip of Macedonia. At the age of 17 he entered Plato's Academy where he remained for 20 years. When Plato died at a wedding feast in 347BC, Aristotle left the Academy and became tutor to Alexander, the heir to the Macedonian throne. In 343BC Aristotle returned to Athens and founded the Lyceum, and he died in 322BC, the year after the death of Alexander the Great.

In the Hellenistic Age many philosophers were atheists. But in his Metaphysics, Aristotle postulated a single supreme being loosely referred to as the 'Prime Mover', which was either a 'conscious being' or a 'force of nature'. Thomas Aquinas (1225-1274) further developed Aristotle's ideas. He was an Italian philosopher and theologian who put together a famous argument for the existence of God, which he believed could be deduced from our own observations and the order found in the universe. One such argument is called the 'Uncaused Cause'. This states that nothing is caused by itself and every effect has a cause. This leads to a regress, from which emerges the original cause, and that cause is called God.

The argument of Thomas Aquinas has been criticised by the British Evolutionary Biologist Professor Richard Dawkins (b.1941). In Chapter Three of his 2007 book entitled, The GOD Delusion, Prof. Dawkins says, "All the arguments (of Aquinas) rely on the idea of a regress, and the only way to terminate the infinite regress is to invoke the existence of God ... The argument makes the entirely unwarranted assumption that God is immune to the regress and give it a name simply because we need one. It is more sparing to conjure up a 'Big Bang singularity' or some other physical concept as yet unknown."

According to the Theory of Everything, the unknown terminator that Prof. Dawkins was referring to and by which the regress is blocked and can't go beyond is the 'infinite nothing'. The answer to the problem lies inside the first two numbers. The TOE states that everything came from nothing, and this is the reason the shortened name of the theory has a zero between the two letters standing for 'Theory' and 'Everything'. In other words, the regress has to stop at 'the nothing' where as the ancient Egyptians said, "Atum was self-created" as part of the simplest possible mathematical physics equation. The infinite nothing will be discussed in another chapter.

The following summarises the essential argument of Aristotle's 'de Anima': 'In the study of the soul it is necessary to call into council the opinions of our predecessors, to profit from what is sound in their thinking and to avoid their errors. The soul is to a living body as sight is to the eye. The soul corresponds to the power of sight. The body has life because the soul animates it. Therefore, the soul is a living thing, but the body is a composite substance composed of biological matter.'

The soul would seem to be inseparable from the body. However, living things can be classified according to the type of lives they lead. For living things to have a soul they must possess a natural body capable of functioning in a certain way. Such functions will give a general account of the soul that inhabits that particular body. Therefore, to have a soul is to possess a body capable of performing certain essential functions.

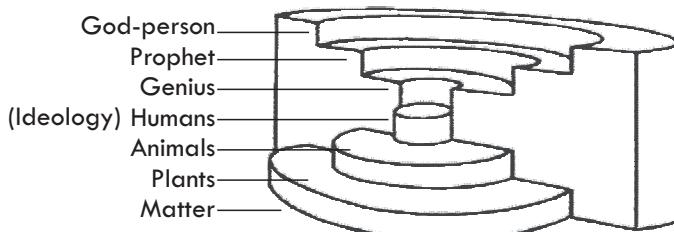

Diagram showing the seven steps to heaven

The soul is the source of nutrition, sensation, locomotion and thinking, because the soul generates the life force at these different levels of function in the body. Without the soul these essential functions cannot take place. Nutrition means both self-nutrition and making one's own food like plants do, or being able to digest ready-made food like animals. Sensation means irritability, which is being able to respond to a stimulus, or the possession of sense organs. Some animals have the power of locomotion, and another order of animals have the power of thought; this belongs to humans. And there is yet another even higher order of mind called intuitive thought possessed by the genius. Therefore, the different functions of the soul form a hierarchy. All these functions seem to require a body because the performance of these functions includes a body.

The Theory of Soul

Most people accept the fact they have a body, but few accept or understand the existence of their own soul. The soul is not only theoretical, it is mostly experiential; so the Theory of Soul is based on seven axioms symbolised by the seven-pointed star or heptagram shown at the beginning of the chapter.

The first axiom of soul is wakefulness. A fresh corpse can be given some functioning by inducing electric currents, in the same way as firing up a computer or car engine, but these things are not alive. It is very plain to see the similarity between inert matter and a lifeless body. There is not much beauty in a corpse, but the difference is wakefulness. A car needs a driver, a body needs a soul.

If we didn't have a soul we would all live in the present, and in the now, all the time with our body; like a computer. But because we have a soul that thinks, the mind is always pushed around by our thoughts and tries to escape the body into other times and places. This is called escapism. In this respect the mind is like a bird, it continually likes to fly away from the body; but it always has to come back and return to its cage.

The soul never sleeps; only the body needs sleep and rest. When an animal is awake the limbs generally support the trunk above the ground and the soul animates the body by interacting with the senses and environment during the daytime. But when the body sleeps at night the soul remains awake, interacts with our interior world and that's why we dream.

Cats sleep most of the time. When cats sleep they dream because they have rapid eye movements. Their dreams are just as real for them as when they are awake. The wake-dream is for looking after their body to get food and find protection and warmth. The sleep-dream is to look after the soul and mind. It is exactly the same for humans.

The different levels of consciousness in living creatures can be explained by the hierarchy of souls, as first propounded by Aristotle during the 330sBC. The hierarchy of souls can be divided into seven levels of consciousness because there are seven shells of the wave quantum. The basic structure of soul is the dimensional particle, which generates the universal energy called wave vibrations. It is these wave vibrations on the outer shell of the wave quantum that create and sustain the sub-atomic particles comprising inert matter. The remaining inner shells do not form particles but influence biological matter and thought.

The concept of soul is based upon the common sense observation that living creatures are self-animated, dream and possess consciousness. These three factors alone contribute to wakefulness.

The second axiom is the nature of soul. The exact nature of the human soul has the following characteristics:

- (i) The soul is a gift from god where everyone came from
- (ii) The soul is who we really are
- (iii) The soul in everyone is beauty
- (iv) The heart is the centre of the soul and more involved with the inner world because it has feelings
- (v) The mind is an appendage of the soul and is more involved with the external world because it relies on the senses.

The third axiom of soul is origins. Humans were made by god as part of the logos. The logos is the defining principle of the universe. God, or 'The One' is full of love, kindness and every beautiful feeling, which means the human soul inherits these god-like characteristics and originates from god. For this reason, humans are exalted spiritual beings of love and understanding who possess thought. Humans are attracted to each other socially through the need for shared experiences because of these spiritual connections. We are not materialistic and consumerist, low-living animals as the cartel consensus reality likes to treat us in this Spiritual Dark-age of elite population control.

I always knew there had to be something in this world that proves there was another world beyond this one, such as the value of pi; but never did I have the direct and absolute proof beyond any doubt whatsoever. This is what many people are now struggling with in Auckland!

One day during mid-April 2007, my ten-year-old daughter Nadia was playing on her bike with her next door neighbour friend called Porsche, who was nine at the time. Nadia said to Porsche, "Why do you want to go to Henderson Valley School instead of the Christian school?"

Porsche replied, "Because I don't believe in God."

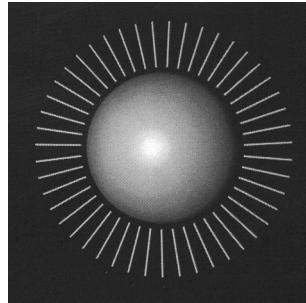

"Why don't you believe in God?" Nadia asked.

"I believe in you because I can see you. But I don't believe in God because I can't see God!" Porsche answered. What I love so much about that conversation between the two little girls was the simplicity and directness compared with the way adults talk and think.

It was only the day before Nadia had the conversation with Porsche when I was writing down on a blank sheet of paper the first line of a new book that read, 'In the beginning there was only god ...' At the same time a vivid picture of god flashed into my mind's eye in the form of a vision. Together with the vision came a strong feeling that told me I was seeing god. It was the first time in my life I had seen such a bright flash in which god looked like a huge white ball or sphere surrounded by a bright halo. The surrounding halo was the universal energy from which everything has origin and connection to god.

The vision of god on that day in April 2007, has changed my whole life ever since, as such visions do to many people who have experienced them; for now all I have to do is close my eyes and relax or meditate and the image of god always appears. And according to Nadia and Porsche's conversation the very next day I could then say, "I believe in god because I can see god." I feel I am already feasting at the table of the gods, and my mission since then is to dispense knowledge where ignorance abounds.

The ancient Greeks called god either 'the One' or 'the Totally Good'.

The fourth axiom of soul is the duality. The duality means body and soul are opposite energies; the body is a materialisation of biological matter, while the soul is a non-material entity composed of dimensional particles. This simple concept may be symbolised as follows:

The diagram above shows the separation between the human body and soul as a duality.

As the duality is a separation into body and soul, so let the body be symbolised as three straight lines in the form of a triangle with three points, and the soul as a curved line in the form of a balloon with one point.

Diagram showing the human duality forces

The body/soul duality is also separated into aspects, which means both body and soul comes in three different physical forms: idealistic, passive and active.

Diagram showing the human aspect forces

The human aspect forces may be described as follows: The neuter condition of the body is an isosceles triangle, female is an equilateral triangle and male an inverted equilateral triangle. The soul is then divided into a left-handed balloon for male, right-handed for female and the third and last neuter is a clover-leaf shaped balloon.

It can be observed that when children reach puberty the neuter condition of their body changes into either male or female. As the body contains a soul there is a corresponding change to the soul. Upon reaching adulthood the body and soul become either male or female.

Also, the separation of the body and the soul is into positive and negative forms. This means a soul cannot combine with a body unless it has the opposite attractive energy, so a positive body for example must combine with a negative soul. In other words, if the body is female, then it must have a male soul; and likewise a male body must combine with a female soul.

When a man sees a pretty woman he thinks he is back in paradise, but the actual person is very different because it has a male soul. The following characteristics define the male soul:

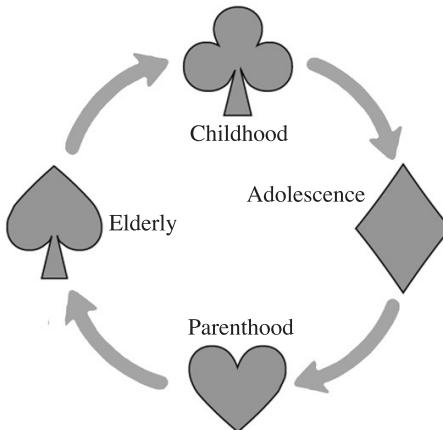

- (i) The male soul is very strong
- (ii) The male soul is very social
- (iii) The male soul gives protection to the family
- (iv) It is very intelligent with a practical turn of mind
- (v) The male soul has an active imagination

The characteristics of the female soul are as follows:

- (i) The female soul is very beautiful
- (ii) The female soul likes to enjoy itself and socialize

- (iii) It is very proficient in the arts and technology
- (iv) It is dreamy with a specific creative intelligence
- (v) The female soul is not afraid of the unknown

The fourth axiom of soul is the human life cycle, which is defined according to a state cycle as follows:

- (i) The water state is a combination of an isosceles triangle and a clover-leaf, where the apex of the triangle joins to the centre of the clover leaf creating the symbol for clubs. Clubs has the smallest body symbol but the largest soul symbol because children are very spiritual and have a shapeable love.
- (ii) The air state is a combination of the two body symbols joined by their bases joined top and bottom, creating the symbol for diamonds. Diamonds represents in this case the two dominant body symbols of adolescence and singles because they have a more taking and experimental love where the soul is recessive, quite shy and retiring.
- (iii) The fire state is next in the cycle and a combination between the two soul symbols joined side by side to create the symbol for hearts. Hearts represents the two dominant soul symbols for partnership, marriage and parenthood, because they have a more open and giving love in which the soul is dominant and shows expressive love.
- (iv) Earth builds upon the previous formula and is a combination of an isosceles triangle and inverted heart, where the apex joins the centre of the inverted heart, so creating the symbol for spades. Whatever the soul achieves under hearts is stabilised under spades, so hearts is reversed. Thus, the body can become a limitation if it is not looked after under a still dominant soul, and spades represents the elderly (60-plus) that exhibits a sharing love.

Human love is best expressed when the people in society show teamwork, rather than working against each other all the time with money. Love is stifled in a money hungry and debt-driven society because improvement graphs continue to plunge downwards after depressions. Love is always given better expression in a non-material society that has to rely solely on its social goodwill where improvements go upwards after a depression. What made societies so successful during the Ice Age were because its members cooperated with each other without the excessive materialism we see today.

There is a new awareness, and a different reality emerging as the reader comes to an understanding of how much the soul plays in our everyday lives; quite different from the Auckland we started out with at the beginning of this chapter. People all around the planet are beginning to discover again that we live in a deeply mysterious world, full of sudden coincidences and synchronistic encounters that seem destined. This is because there is a universal energy from which everything is made and to which we are all connected.

By following our feelings, imaginations and intuitions we can connect with this energy and develop a spiritual consciousness until we can realise the ultimate truth.

Those who have become trapped by the system, those who have been grounded by the system and lost the ability of flight and those who just cannot connect; feel uncertain, confused and therefore have a need to control and dominate others, are all victims of the system. But Auckland is changing; people are having visions of a better Auckland, also the world is changing as more people are starting to feel connected with the universal energy on a day to day basis and in their daily lives.

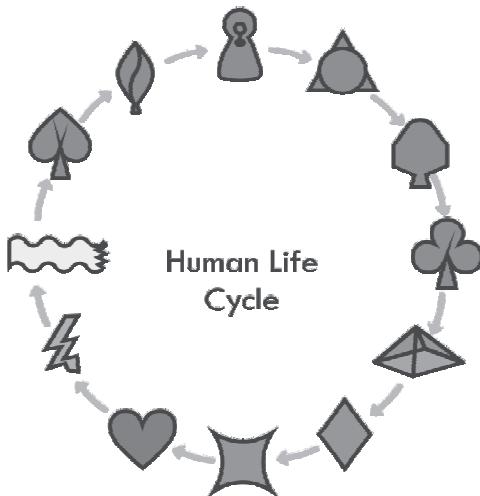

We are starting to realise we are all travellers to this time and visitors to this place; that we have been born into this space-time and are just passing through. Our purpose is to observe, learn, grow and love, and then once we have sprung from this mortal coil we can return to our true home.

The fifth axiom of soul is a duodecimal life-test. The journey of life can be further separated out as a duodecimal (twelve) system in which the soul undergoes different life tests at each stage.

At the beginning of history there were four great civilisations on Earth. With the collapse of Minoan Civilisation due to the Thera eruption (1628BC), the Middle Kingdom of Egypt (1630BC) and Indus Valley Civilisation (~1700BC) all at about the same time much of the advanced knowledge of soul was lost. The Babylonians were at the end of a long continuous line of civilisation starting with the Sumer's that collapsed in 2350BC. They were succeeded by the Akkadians who collapsed in 2000BC, which saw the rise of the Babylonians. Without their trading partners the Babylonians did not collapse but went into a steady decline starting around 1550BC.

With the collapse of a civilisation also goes much of its knowledge. The Phoenicians were the maritime arm of the Middle Kingdom, and they passed on a lot of their knowledge to new civilisations that were starting to grow in the same area, such as the ancient Greeks to the west, the Hittites to the north, the New Kingdom of Egypt to the south, the Babylonians to the east and the Israelites in the same area. Without spiritual knowledge a civilisation cannot grow, but thanks to the Phoenicians the new civilisation close by sprung up like mushrooms. Western civilisation inherited much of its foundation of knowledge from the ancient Greeks and so did the ancient Romans but they turned materialistic. Now we have gone the way of excessive materialism ourselves and all spiritual knowledge is suppressed, which will cause our civilisation to spiral into a cultural black hole, which has already started.

The ancient Greeks knew this duodecimal system as 'the twelve tests of Hercules', the knowledge of which they derived from the Indus Valley Civilisation god called Ganesh, through the Minoans and Phoenicians who traded with them. The Greeks changed the name of Ganesh to Hercules as they absorbed the spiritual knowledge into their own culture. Both Hercules and Ganesh were the same god that had super human strength.

Diagram of the human life-cycle divided into twelve tests

The twelve life tests may be described as follows starting at one-o'clock in the diagram:

1. Awaken. When a baby cries you give it something, or take it somewhere, and when it stops crying you know it is the solution it wants. Those desires of a baby turn out to be similar to our own as adults.

When you are born there are only your mother's eyes for reassurance, which is love. Then there is milk, warmth and sleep to keep you alive; but after that we start to make sense of the blooming buzzing confusion, but at death we have the fear of having to give up the illusion.

Nobody teaches a baby to crawl. Nobody teaches a baby to walk. They must teach themselves by doing it, they must teach themselves to think, feel and experience it for themselves. Such learning turns out to be similar to our own, because we think, feel and do. But when we go to school we are told what to think, we are made to suppress our feelings in favour of the teacher's standards and our experiences are always limited to the classroom. Our education system has flat lined because it lacks a human heart. This creates a Homo ignoramus, it is the artificial society we have become exposed to and for most has become the main test of our lives.

2. Truth. In the beginning was the truth and it has been there since the creation. When a child is born they bring truth with them into this world. This water sign represents the toddler of about two-years-old, about the time when toddlers are learning to talk. It is a stage before all the other stages whose symbol means, 'the soul speaks the truth'. It is the same with animals, people feel comfortable in their presence and much can be learned about this beautiful stage in the life cycle, before the system gets to the child.

When we were children we had big dreams, but as we grew older we gave up on our dreams and ended up doing the things we do now because of this entrapment, but this test is what brings adults back to the truth again. The truth is realising why we are here and what lies behind everything.

3. Clubs. This fully developed active water state encourages the mind to flow in all directions; its three aspects represent talents, showing off and difficulties.

The next set of three signs belongs to the air state and all these signs are based upon the square or a modification of the square. The square represents the system and material side of life.

4. Pyramid. Instead of the three aspects of clubs being based upon the triangle, they now become based upon the square, so forming a pyramid. For the soul, it represents getting into the wild stages of life, which becomes involved with money and so teenagers begin to think in terms of money to buy material things when they can get hold of it.

5. Diamonds. This is a square standing on only one of its points, and where negative thinking stands the body in front of the soul. It symbolises the cross, in which the soul is crucified on the two beams of spacetime. Many people in a materialistic society remain trapped at this stage for most of their lives.

6. Concave Square. This is a concave square standing on two of its points. It represents happiness, love and devotion. These people with the caved-in-square and good hearts enjoy life without worrying too much.

7. Hearts. This sign represents a complete spiritual unity of the soul. It is for the partnership situation or married couple.

8. Problems. The problem symbol found after marriage applies to all married couples, because everyone has problems when they get married. It is where the more dominant male soul interferes with the lady soul. Often the male soul tries to make the female soul what he wants her to be, not what she really is.

The entire universe is based on relationship; nothing is an island unto itself even at the elemental or mental level. The Earth/Moon relationship serves to illustrate this point, which goes through four phases: The capture event, period of independent rotations, rotational locking of the smaller body and gradual separation, and the final phase is when the dominant body becomes rotationally locked also.

Statistical analyses of many thousands of human relationships reveal exactly the same model as the Earth/Moon relationship on a smaller time scale. There are four main crisis points in a marriage as follows: 1, 2½, 7, and 22 years.

Before marriage singles relate well to the social environment within a society where potential mates can be found. In the first Earthy phase of the relationship the rewards are immediate because there is physical love and the couple will drop out of the social scene, become a little antisocial and do not contact their friends as much and the law of diminishing returns sets in with the one year crisis point. The second watery phase becomes more argumentative. The partners start to behave more as individuals, there is a struggle for dominance, and one partner tries to interfere with the other. In general there are four main signs of relationship breakdown that comes to a head after two-and-a-half-years:

1. They start fantasizing about other people of the opposite sex
2. Become prickly like a hedgehog and over-react to each other
3. Start criticising each other at the slightest opportunity
4. Try to demoralise the opponent.

The third Airy phase after the struggle for dominance is the seven-year surrender, where one partner accepts the passive role in order to keep the marriage together as usually children are involved. The relationship can no longer depend entirely on its physical side and becomes ever more problematical. This is sometimes called the seven year itch. The last fiery phase runs for twenty-two years and is a more listening phase, where the dominant partner finally loses their grip and becomes more committed to the marriage, initiating the golden years.

When the male soul becomes more dominant in a relationship there are four simple rules the female soul can follow to help this situation:

Rule One: Never argue, arguing is falsity, but do your own thing

Rule Two: Stay calm under all conditions. The responsibility of the female soul is to keep the family together

Rule Three: Relax; a lot of it is in your mind

Rule Four: Back away, many problems fix themselves once the heat goes out of it. Only pick your fights if you have to.

9. Coliesia. This is the yellow flag of surrender. It is not a good sign. It is when people don't really care, and they give up. Surrender occurs when the female soul feels free from the male soul. It's also when a person sells their soul to the system because we have to relate to the system also.

The earth symbols are all based upon spades, which is an inverted hearts sign, from which the soul can undergo further stages of development.

10. Spades. Spades continues soul development with the inverted hearts sign and the weaker isosceles triangle representing the body. It represents old age and the golden years. The soul is strong and willing, but the body is weak.

11. Aletheia. The symbol for this stage in the life cycle looks like a leaf or half-deflated balloon and represents both the body and soul. The body has become like an old, mottled and crinkled leaf just before it falls from the tree. Where one area of the leaf decreases, the other unseen area increases, and the body finally admits there is a soul. 'Aletheia' is an ancient Greek word that means 'disclosure', it is the state of not being hidden, in relation to the soul. It also means factuality or reality. Consequently, the opposite Greek word 'lethe', literally means oblivion or forgetfulness. It is pre-Socratic in origin and in ancient Greek mythology Lethe was called the River of Forgetfulness. According to the ancient Greeks the soul drinks from Lethe in the underworld before it is born, so it cannot remember its divine origins. This meaning aspires to the fact that a human being will then spend their entire life on Earth trying to remember everything they had forgotten about as a divine being in heaven, by bringing during their lifetime what is hidden in their soul out into the open.

The symbol of Aletheia is also in the shape of a feather. The ancient Egyptians took their concept of truth to be when we die our 'Souls are weighted against the feather of truth'. This 'weighing' of the soul would determine how a person performed over a lifetime and if we were to be either reborn or could remain in heaven as a god or goddess.

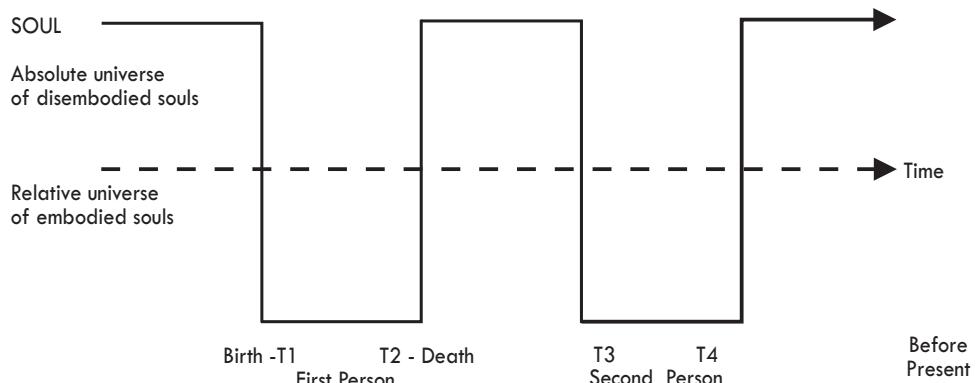

We are here because we have a soul.

12. Freedom. This symbol shows the shape of the soul with a baby's rattle in the centre. After casting off its mortal coil or outer shell, the soul floats free from the material world of shadows and falls into happiness.

The sixth axiom of soul is Reincarnation. If there was no reincarnation you wouldn't have a personality when you are little. All children come into the world with their own personalities. Therefore, there is reincarnation.

One of the arguments Socrates advances for reincarnation is called the cycle of opposites, which was written down and recorded in the Phaedo by Plato. The cycle of opposites may be summarised briefly as follows: For the soul to survive a radical change such as from life to death or from death to life again, it must be a substance in its own right, and it must be able to remain the same throughout all those changes.

We now know that 'substance' to be composed of dimensional particles, and during life the soul takes on the shape of the body but conforms to its own shape after death.

In other words, the soul preserves its identity as it undergoes the cycle of changes: death → life → death → life etc. Hence the name of the argument, 'the cycle of opposites', the opposites being 'life/death', where life means 'carnate' and reincarnate means 'reborn'.

The above illustration shows two soul cycles or what might be called life times. There is a unidirectional line running through the middle of the diagram representing time. Above the time line is the passive universe of disembodied souls, and below the time line is our active universe of embodied souls. There is another line moving forward with time, but it does so both above and below the time line in a zig-zag fashion. This represents the soul as it travels through the cycle of opposites.

A soul can exist both above and below the time line, but the body only below it. In this relative or active universe it is only possible to observe two different bodies at two different life times, but when 'soul' is taken into account, both bodies are seen to possess the same soul.

Given that point-T1 represents the year of birth of the first person and T2 the same person's year of death, and T3 is the birth year and T4 the death year of the second person, then the reincarnation formula may be represented as follows:

First Person (T1-T2) → Second Person (T3-T4)

Both the definition and its exemplification of the phenomenon are the only means to understand reincarnation. Socrates gave a good definition through his cycle of opposites, and this only leaves some examples. The following is a brief study of well-known individual cases of reincarnation over at least two cycles. The evidence linking these well-known individuals is assessed by matching photographs where changes of cultural identity through time are taken into account (not included here), the similarity of life style, and the similar talents these souls exercise in each life.

Socrates (470-399BC) → Nelson Mandela (1918-2017)

In personal appearance Socrates was ugly: short and stout with a broad face, prominent eyes and a wide pug nose. He won over nearly everyone with his good humour, wit and the fascination of his conversation. He was an embarrassment to the system that did not like his openness and those same characteristics were seen to apply to Nelson Mandela recently. The Delphic oracle proclaimed him the wisest Greek of his time, and Socrates replied that if he were the wisest it was only because he alone knew that he knew nothing. He was a serious man. He was a square peg in a round hole during his Greek life and did not appear to fit in well with society. He was aware of his own energy and more interested in doing things for himself than relying on magic. But the soul of Socrates needed to adapt to the new age where there was little need for philosophy in South Africa. People like Socrates and Mandela are political activists, leaders amongst men, and born into hardship and resilience as determined by the gods.

Plato (428-348BC) → Stanley (1841-1904) → Ian Scott (1945-2013)

The first things noticeable in the photographs of these men are the top of their heads are unusually flat. This feature indicates they are usually very practical and put everything into what they are doing, and this was certainly true with Ian Scott as I knew him, because he became an accomplished and famous New Zealand artist who lived in Auckland. Plato's real name was Aristocles, but he was given the nick-name 'Plato' because it came from the word 'Platon', which means 'flat-head' in ancient Greek. Plato's writings were brought into sharper focus by his associations with Socrates. He devoted his earliest dialogues to Socrates in an effort to undo the work of the executioner. He fled Athens with other Socratics before the execution, returning 12 years later and establishing his university on a piece of land he bought on the outskirts of Athens.

Sir Henry Morton Stanley was an Anglo-American explorer and journalist famous for his meeting with the Scottish missionary and explorer David Livingston, whom he met at Ujiji, on Lake Tanganyika in 1871. He later discovered and developed the Congo region for the Belgian King Leopold II, and helped establish the Congo Free State. There he built a road in the Congo basin and launched steamers on the upper river. When he faced difficulties he was known for his perseverance and earned the name 'Rock Breaker'. He discovered the Ruwenzori Range, which Ptolemy called the 'Mountains of the Moon' on his map. Having found the source of the Nile and other geographical mysteries he wrote a book called 'In Darkest Africa'.

Aristotle (384-322BC) → Darwin (1809-1882)

What survives of Aristotle's works are full lecture notes on his courses. These demonstrate he surveyed his subject matter systematically and developed his thesis subtly and profoundly. As a philosopher he explored all known levels of intellectual enquiry including logic, metaphysics, zoology, physics, politics, ethics, poetics and rhetoric. With the benefit of hindsight reading Aristotle's works gives the distinct feeling one is reading Darwin without the evolution. Darwin was the first to put forward a reasonable theory of evolution backed by what society thought at the time was impressive evidence.

Ramses II (1297-1212BC) → Pericles (490-429BC) → Hitler (1889-1945)

These three people have certain essential traits in common. Firstly in their physical appearance. Ramses II and Hitler have distinctive long upper lips, which Hitler covered with a moustache. This feature characterises good and convincing talkers and serious thinkers. Secondly the personality can be deduced from the hand as belonging to one out of 120 types, where Ramses II falls into the Venus Division personality type, which means such people interact with others well but cannot be relied upon. Others always find something in these individuals that they like. They are also people who like to find out the answers. Such people like to put their ideas into action, which in all three cases was through building projects. Pericles was a celebrated Athenian statesman and orator. He strove for the unification of Greece, but the hostility of Sparta prevented its realisation. Under his guidance the city achieved its greatest glory and prosperity, and so did Germany under Hitler. Until the night of the Long Knives. The allies demonised Hitler because they were trying to cover up their own atrocities. All three men were not so much military people, for their main fields were diplomacy and politics. Hitler was reborn in Auckland in 1996.

There has been much speculation on the uncanny parallels between these two high-spirited, quick-witted and self-educated presidents of the USA. Born to a poor farming family, Abraham Lincoln had little chance of an education. He read only a few books, but absorbed what he did read. He became a lawyer and married Mary Todd in 1842, whom belonged to the social aristocracy and encouraged her husband to run for the presidency. She ran up some embarrassing bills and saw her husband murdered at her side.

Kennedy was not good at school work, but had qualities his school record did not reveal. He was always able to say the right thing at the right time. At the age of 28 he was encouraged to enter politics by his father. With the entire Kennedy family behind him, their money, influence and backing at every step, he became a senator. He met Jacqueline Lee Bouvier in 1953, who was the reincarnation of Mary Todd. She belonged to the social aristocracy. She also encouraged her husband to run for president. She ran up some embarrassing bills, and saw her husband murdered at her side. When Kennedy was assassinated America lost more than a president; they lost their freedom.

Marie Antoinette → Empress Elisabeth (Sisi) → Princess Diana (1961-1997)

Marie Antoinette (1755-1793) assumed the title of Queen of France when her husband, Louis XVI of France ascended the throne in 1774. Initially charmed by her personality and beauty at first, the French people generally came to dislike her, accusing the Austrian woman of being promiscuous and harbouring sympathies for France's enemies, particularly Austria, her country of origin.

When the Austrian Emperor Franz Joseph came to woo Helene, he fell in love with her 15-year-old sister Sisi (1837-1898) instead and they married in Vienna a year later. The wedding created a sensation and their beautiful young Empress entranced the Viennese public.

Both Sisi and Diana look identical, were unhappy on their honeymoon and both developed eating disorders. Sisi was shot dead in Geneva in 1998. Diana was well known for her fund-raising work for international charities and as an imminent celebrity of the 20th Century. She remained the object of worldwide media scrutiny during and after her divorce in 1996, which caused considerable embarrassment to the Royal Family. There was a conspiracy to put an end to the problem and this resulted in a horrific car crash in a Paris underpass on the 31st of August 1997.

Descartes (1596-1650) → Albert Einstein (1879-1955)

Descartes was both a philosopher and mathematician. In mathematics he linked algebra with geometry, as a philosopher he was capable of formulating a very powerful and simple thesis, and became known as the father of modern philosophy. So it is not so surprising that what is so unique about Einstein's Theory of Relativity is that it links another very powerful idea with mathematical proof. Pictures of Descartes and Einstein look identical.

Sargon the Great → Alexander the Great [356-323BC] → Aleksander [b.1978]

Sargon the Great [2370-2310BC] was born during the last days of Sumer civilisation and had unknown parentage, but was raised by a farmer called Akki in Kish, one of the city states of Sumer in ancient Mesopotamia. He was chosen as a gardener for the king and rose to cup bearer under King Ur-Zababa, of Kish. The king was not good to the people so Sargon led a revolt and claimed the throne. Once in power he lost no time in conquering near-by Sumerian city-states. He was an outstanding military leader and the first king to maintain a permanent army and appointed his closest associates to serve as governors of conquered cities.

Sargon subjected the troublesome Elamites to the east. From there he advanced up the Euphrates river leading his victorious military expeditions into northern Mesopotamia. Then he marched westwards, extending his conquests as far as the Taurus mountains near the Mediterranean coasts of Syria and Turkey. He even carried his armies into Egypt, Ethiopia and to the borders of India. Sargon's great empire fell apart after his death. His courtiers assassinated him after a Sumerian plot assisted from the north by the Assyrians.

Alexander the Great worked the same model as in the previous life and was also a master of strategy and tactics. He was also a military genius whose campaigns and battles were studied in great detail by later generals.

Having secured his position in Europe, Alexander took the offensive against the Persian Empire, as revenge for the desecrations of Xerxes. He faced a much larger Persian army at Issus in 333BC and won a brilliant victory over Darius, the King of Persia. After Issus he marched rapidly south to Egypt in order to deprive the Persian fleet of its port facilities.

Alexander also wanted to answer the question, 'Who am I?', so from Memphis in Egypt he marched a small band of his soldiers across the Libyan desert to the oasis of Siwa to question the oracle of Zeus Ammon. Siwa was a bustling island of life in a vast sea of desert. The high priest welcomed the king and conducted him into the temples inner sanctum where Alexander was told he had been reborn as a member of a previous advanced civilisation. Vestiges of this temple can still be seen there today.

Although modern historians consider that luck played a part in his success they do not realise he was a man ahead of his time. He is the only person in history to have conquered the then known world and succeeded because of his strong will-power, self-confidence and love of freedom.

While in India with his army, Alexander met a famous Yogi. He spoke to him and liked him very much. He even wanted the Yogi to accompany him back to Greece, but the Yogi did not want to go. Alexander said, "If you don't come I will have you put to death."

The Yogi replied, "You can kill me, but you can't even see me because my soul only dwells in my body, which is who I really am"

Alexander was so impressed with his reply he bestowed generous gifts on him and continued on his way in a very thoughtful frame of mind. Alexander died prematurely of a fever after his doctor poured poison into his wine cup when he was drunk during a feast.

How I found Alexander the Great in his present life is worth mentioning. It was July 1998, in Henderson Auckland, and I had been working in Lasercopy on the pre-press production of 'Pre-Tasman Explorers'. I was walking directly across the road into Dick Smith Electronics when I was stopped at the door by one of the sales staff who wanted to buy a copy of my book. When I told him about my next book we quickly developed a common interest. He introduced himself as the 26-year-old Haris Vitasovich. Haris went on to say he was saving hard to make the journey over to Yugoslavia, where if Alexander was to be reborn that would be the place to find him. It came a hot Friday when his plane was ready to take off from Auckland airport, and Haris became very nervous and unstable at the thought of his near impossible mission, but that very thought fed Haris' dreams of grandeur. "Wh-what do I say to this guy if I meet him?" he asked.

"You'll just have to lay it on the line Haris and show him whose boss. Anyway, the actual situation will probably turn out much different from how you imagine" I replied.

We both felt Alexander would be in Bosnia, so he was going to fly to Sarajevo and start the search from there. The only information he had was a photograph and the physical description from the history books I had given him. Haris got off the plane at Sarajevo airport and met Alexander on the very first day of arrival. His name was Alexander, because his mother named him in memory of Alexander the Great, and he had the same mother as before who was called Olympus.

Haris sent me the following facsimile on the 4th of June 1999: "Greetings Ross! Well, I have been thinking deeply, I do believe I have found Alexander who is the only house guest where I am staying and his name is Sasha, which is short for Aleksande. He fits your description perfectly and was born on the 21/08/1978."

Haris ran out of money and curtailed his overseas journey, but continued to communicate with Alexander by e-mail and speaks constantly on the phone with him. One day Haris called me over to his place to see photographs of his trip and the amazing people he had meet, all of whom could be identified with Alexander in the previous life. For example, Haris is a reincarnation of Hephaestion (356-324BC).

Haris and Alexander were very close then and even now in the present day. He married the daughter of Darius III then, there he was portrayed as Alexander's alter ego and the sharer of his heroic dreams. This could not be further from the truth as I know him today in Henderson, and he is going to marry the same beautiful woman that I predicted following a vision. Darius III was reborn as Saddam Hussein of Iraq.

In his present life though, Alexander is continuing his spiritual quest and looking inside himself, and has become a Catholic Priest.

Che Guevara (1928-1967)

Luke Hayes (b.1990)

Ernesto (Che) Guevara was born in Rosario in Argentina, and gave meaning and fame to his life because it represented the worldwide dissatisfaction with the 'system' that today many people feel in their hearts. Luke was born where I met him in Cairns, Queensland, Australia, following a vision I had in 2000 that I would meet him there one day. The opportunity came in 2011 when I took a flight from Auckland to the Gold Coast. I stayed in central Cairns with a friend called Alex. I explained to Alex after dinner one day my interest in Che Guevara and that I was trying to search for him in his new life in Cairns, much like the Buddhist monks used to search for the reincarnation of the new Dalai Lamas. I showed Alex the only information I had, which was a photograph and the physical description from the history books. We found him the very next day.

Given Luke's behavioural difficulties, his mother is rather protective of him, and for his 21st birthday his parents sent him to Bali for a holiday with one of his friends, where they hired motor cycles and explored the entire island. Then, Luke spoke, "During the fortnight in Bali we hired motor cycles, but the police picked us up for not having helmets. We had to bribe the officer with money to get rid of him. I got into a fight while drunk with a mate over some girls. I don't like Australian women because they are ignorant. We had some magic mushrooms, and since being back from Bali I have been having some weird and vivid dreams, so sometimes I do not know which is real, the dreams or my own experiences. For me, Cairns is too colloquial, too small and everyone knows everyone else and what's going on. I have a great desire to do more travelling again like further into South East Asia." There is a clearly marked marriage line on his hand, so he might end up marrying someone from that area.

There will be serious rioting in Java in the years to come, and in the future with people flooding down into northern Queensland there is going to be a lot of trouble, so that might be where his destiny is connected this time round.

King Harold II (1022-1066) → President Donald Trump (b.1946-)

King Harold II of England was the son of Earl of Godwin. His claim to the throne was highly disputed by William the Conqueror, who defeated him at the Battle of Hastings in 1066. King Harold died with an arrow to his eye.

Nostradamus predicted an English king would become president of America during the last days of civilisation; Billionaire Donald Trump became president in 2017 amongst controversy and opposition from the Deep State, the opposition Democratic Party, the Washington establishment and the Media. Trump has a volatile Apollo Multiplication personality and is a hard negotiator, who likes to do things his own way and make people think.

Henry VIII (1491-1547) → Winston Churchill (1874-1965) → Prince George (b.2013)

The seventh axiom is the quest. The quest of the soul is to experience the pain, the struggle and the joy in finding the truth to the cause.

Everyone wants it, but nobody gives it, so nobody gets it. What is it?

The answer is the truth, because the basis of everything is truth!

The Truth has always been there since the beginning of creation, but Auckland has not. Now, Auckland has become politics, and the only thing free of politics is the truth.

The truth is law, because it is the one law we are obliged to follow. Men and women of higher consciousness always seek the truth, and they are not content with anything less than the truth. When such people find out the reality of the world is actually based on falsity they feel violated and suffer the pain that goes along with that. Until this definition [of truth] is clarified there will always be dissatisfaction within us, and the striving for a better world. What we have now is legal fiction with property ownership, television and religion to keep society under control.

According to the dictionary usage 'truth' is the quality of being true, genuine or factual. It can also refer to a proven or verified fact or principle, or simply something that is true as opposed to something that is false. This latter and simple meaning of truth lends itself well to a purely logical and social definition where the opposite meanings can be expressed symbolically:

Truth is opposite to Falsity

In the above equation there are three symbols shown, where the letter 'T' stands for truth. Everyone has an affinity for the truth because it is a 'mind object', it is a spiritual thing and there is some goodness in every human being, because everyone in their heart wants to know the truth.

'F' on the other hand stands for falsity, because at the same time anyone can be led off the path into the grey area between the two extremes; material or spiritual. Both symbols are on each side of the opposition sign that means, 'opposite to'.

However, this is a very narrow definition of truth because in nature there is always a grey area, something can be true and false at the same time, and the definition does not actually tell us much about truth itself. As a concept though 'truth' is too often assumed rather than being the subject of discussion, you cannot really define something like truth in terms of what it is not. However, the two words are in a relationship with each other and there is a universal application for both terms.

In the social context of the terms, 'truth' represents the 'people', who by nature are inherently hard-wired for peace, co-operation and social unity. According to the ancient Greeks, a person comes into the world as a soul with the fundamental right to walk on the land and share in the products of the land and with others the things of this world. No one group or tribe has the right to claim things solely for themselves at the expense of others, because that is to ignore and deny the existence of a creator. The truth cannot be compared with material things either as different philosophers have tried.

For this purpose the ancient Greeks had a more embracing definition based on their word for truth, which was called 'aletheia'. Aletheia means 'disclosure', it is the state of not being hidden. In other words, only the soul speaks the truth, the rest of the time people wear a mask over their faces to cover the truth. Truth is a non-material and divine concept that most people feel uncomfortable with in everyday life. The truth is based on the facts and people find the facts bitter, because they know they can't get away with the facts. That is why people can only begin to see the truth when they are ready to acknowledge the facts.

The Mask

1. Everything is an illusion
2. Everyone wears a mask
3. The mask tries to make sense of the illusion
4. The mask is changeable
5. The structure of the mask is a person's mentality
6. The behaviour of the mask is determined both by its attraction and response to the illusion
7. Under the mask lies the sparkling soul
8. The sparkling soul learns to reject the illusion
9. A very good accomplishment is to surrender or remove the mask
10. A complete person is just a sparkling soul.

The Illusion

The diagram above is a photograph of a 2012 crop circle. Crop circles form through the collective consciousness of humanity, which makes them very significant artefacts. This one is a challenge and quite complex, so I will have to give some background information. I have been studying it for quite a few years now. It shows a black three-dimensional cube floating in space and inside a cut-open half cube containing a pattern of concentric squares on each of its inside faces. The smoky problem is, does the black cube create the concentric square patterns like a mirror image in a pond, or does the ripple effect of the concentric squares create the cube?

Diagram of the smoking mirror

A human's head is in the shape of a cube or box. The front face of this cube has two eyes, nose and mouth pointing forwards and in the centre of the two side faces are the ears. The skull of a human will sit nicely in a cubic cardboard box because the bottom of the jaw-line is quite flat. Inside the cube is a sphere. The sphere is roughly defined by the brain case. These components, cube and sphere, are composed of cells, neurons, DNA, and atoms. As the brain is made of atoms, atoms are mostly empty space in comparison with thought waves, which is a very subtle form of energy emitted from the dimensional particles making up the mind. As the mind is to the soul, so the brain is to the body.

Humans are the carriers of ideological thought. When a person has a thought a three-dimensional visual image appears in the centre of their head. It does not matter whether the person is asleep and it is a dream picture or the person is awake and it is a vision or an image corresponding to the outside world, they are all the same dream pictures. The diagram image in question is the black cube.

The black cube is a three-dimensional construction made from two-dimensional brain waves that form patterns on the inside of the spherical part of our head, which is behind the forehead. We think we are seeing with our eyes, but they are only cameras and the actual image is behind our forehead. A camera can't 'see', it can only produce an image; only the sparkling soul can see with the creation of its 'mind objects'.

The visual process of the brain draws attention to the fact that what we see often differs dramatically from what is actually before our eyes. Somehow, an input picture from the world fools the visual system, which mistakenly provides a scene description that is partly non-existent. The input picture is not photographic as one might expect and visual illusions abound. For example, the process that takes concentric circles as input, and produces a spiral as output is called Fraser's spiral. Such an image can hardly be thought of as a photographic copy of the world. Another good example is called the 'Big Moon' illusion, in which the full Moon always looks much bigger when it is closer to the horizon than overhead.

The Great Buddha said, 'We create the world within our own mind'. If you believe the Buddha was speaking the truth, you will believe the concentric squares create the cube, which is the non-material paradigm. If on the other hand you are a materialist you will believe the cube is a true reflection of the exterior world, and that is called the material paradigm. Both paradigms are complimentary opposite to each other.

The concentric squares represent our patterns of thought that originate from the soul, and the cube is the corresponding image created within the mind via the input feed from the senses. The senses are only there to report on the physical universe, while the feelings continue the physical interpretation and visual manifestation. When we sleep at night, dream pictures continue to form within the mind without the sensual input and the feelings continue to interpret those mind objects and images.

The smoking mirror is defined as an ideological thinking process that entraps the mind in both its attraction and response to the dark-cube. The cut-open cube is the resulting material mind that magnifies and dramatizes events, and the dark-cube is the model construct and paradigm of the exterior world within the mind. In other words, it is a virtual reality. Thus people turn to the outside world to express their feelings of entrapment, which is the doctrine of materialism.

A doctrine is a body of teaching used as a standard or social norm. We can stop our children being indoctrinated in false and ungodly ways. Fathers therefore need to be courageous and bold by speaking the truth and learning to see through materialism, which is an illusion.

The reason the exterior world is an illusion relies on the smoking mirror principle that the visual imagery of the brain is a construction within the mind. It turns out the unknown factor scientists are prepared to ignore or play-down are the psychological problems created by the fundamental illusions. They even ignore the fact there is a non-material interpretation of the world in which 'all is mind', in the same way the flat-earth society sees the world as a cube rather than a sphere. To ignore the truth is called ignorance. And the biggest enemy of all is the ignorance of humanity.

On a fine day in September 2013, the author and his 16-year-old daughter Nadia were on Takapuna beach looking out at the horizon to the left of Rangitoto island trying to make out the low lying island of Great Kauri that only rises to 400 metres, which is 110 kilometres away on a clear line of sight. Little Kauri island at 107Kms, the Coromandel peninsula and even tiny Channel island at 90Kms were clearly visible. The only problem on a clear day is the curvature of the Earth, making Great Kauri island from Takapuna beach only visible to about 70Kms, which means it would be below the horizon.

The Maori name for Little Kauri is, 'resting place of the winds', which means on a calm day it is usually covered above with clouds. On the day we were on Takapuna beach you could see the clouds over the top of Great Kauri island as well. Asking Nadia to look just to the left of Rangitoto and just beyond Channel island I said to her, "Can you see Great Kauri island or is it just in your mind that you are creating it?"

"I'm not sure if I can see it or not," she replied.

"I wouldn't worry too much because everything is in your mind anyway, and if you can't see it the indirect evidence of the clouds above it tells you it's there."

Next our attention turned to the much closer Browns and Motuihe islands to the right of Rangitoto from Takapuna beach. "What is your opinion on those islands Nadia?"

"You can tell it's a dream because they look so perfect!"

"What do you mean by that?" I asked.

"Well, I tend to see them from an artistic point of view, and if I were to paint the islands, all you have to do is change the different shades of the same colour and everything looks so perfect!"

"So if everything looks so perfect, you are experiencing beauty, and beauty can only come from inside us. In other words beauty is the soul." In his Theory of Forms, Plato (c.427-347BC) said general terms such as circle, beauty, and number were abstract terms that could be applied to a variety of different objects in the natural world that only existed in the mind as a 'form' or 'idea'. A circle drawn on a page or the disc of the Moon seen in the sky was thus a circle because it partakes of, or is a pale copy of, the perfect circle created by the mind. Such perfect forms do not exist in the ordinary world of experience. When we see an object in nature and call it beautiful our mind is making the attachment of beauty to the object for us. The mask is the materialistic mentality people have when perceiving the exterior world without being aware of its oneness and beauty.

"Another reason I know it's only a dream is that if I wait, say for one or two hours and recall the same picture from my imagination, I can see exactly the same dream picture again," replied Nadia.

"What do you mean you can see exactly the same dream picture with all its exact shades identical to when you were exactly looking at Brown's and Motuihe islands?"

"Yes, Exactly!" Nadia replied.

"Wow, you are so lucky to have such an incredible mind Nadia, because most people can only recall faint and very vague images from their imaginations. But come to think of it, I can remember when your elder brother Zach was only about nine or ten, and I took him into the dense bush at Taupo to find the Cave of skulls, he recalled the experience the same night describing it as watching a colour movie unfolding inside his head."

Muhammad Ali

In October 1975, the news team went to interview Muhammad Ali before his world title boxing fight with Joe Frazier in Manila. In his day, Muhammad Ali was regarded not only as the greatest boxer, but the greatest athlete of all time. Some people would disagree with that, and it's hard to separate his athleticism from his boxing ability and showmanship. Wherever he went there was a show, so that helped him become number one, whether he was or whether he was not. What he has left us is what he's always said; the greatest. While the technicians were still setting up the equipment Ali said, "I am the true champion of the world, and they all shall bow. They all shall bow!"

Then the interviewer told the cameraman to use the big mirror in his hotel room as a third camera. Then Ali said, "You got imagination." Then he went on to say, "You have to have an imagination. You have to have imagination to have this show. You have to set the cameras up. You have to lie on the couches. You have to imagine; you have to imagine. The man who has no imagination stands on the Earth. He has no wings; he cannot fly. Columbus had imagination. The Wright Brothers had imagination. They told me I was gonna fight in Manila so I wrote a poem, 'It'll be a thrilla and a killa and a chilla when I get that gorilla in Manila.' See, these poems are imagination. They attract ... sell tickets. How dare you think Joe Frazier has a chance."

"Don't you think it's a bit silly to pay $10 million to see two people fighting?" Asked the interviewer.

"Well, not really, because they spend $10 billion to go to the Moon! What in the hell are we doing on the Moon! Bringing back two damn rocks. That don't help anybody. But the fight; many people are going to be inspired, they're going to be uplifted.

"I believe that all people have a mission on Earth; all people are born for a purpose. I believe I am wise enough to know my purpose is to be one black man here in this world who's not a prostitute; who's not an Uncle Tom; who's not a behind-licker, a boot kisser; who stands up; who makes millions of dollars; who looks people like yourself in the face, and everybody in the world. Stay great. Stay world famous. Represent god and still make millions of dollars, and don't be an - excuse the expression; arse kisser."

"Only people with beauty can see the beauty in others, and just coming here today [Takapuna beach] and what I have learned is equivalent in my opinion to being at school for two years!" Nadia finally commented.

"Takapuna beach is very special to me because I was born only a few hundred yards from this beach and grew up here, went to kindergarten halfway along the beach at St. Anne's School and sometimes walked home from kindergarten along this very beach. Just imagine me, coming straight from the French Revolution to a place like this, so quiet and such a simple lifestyle in those days just after World War II. I only realise now that it was because I was meant to be a thinker in this life, and that is the reason I have come around to writing this present book seventy years later."

Counter Culture of Love

Sure, the baseline culture in America during the 1960s was materialism, but Elvis was their king and there was nothing quite like the Juke-box in America. Then by 1963, the Beatles had 'taken over' Great Britain and it was even suggested by one radio announcer at the time 'the island' be called 'Beatle-land', formally known as Britain; because it was quite obvious Britannia had been taken by storm; there was so much excitement and happiness around with singing, mini-skirts, dancing and an indescribable social unity. To start with the Beatles were singing simple songs with impeccable arrangements like, "Love is all you need", "Love, love me do", "It's been a hard day's night", "I want to hold your hand", and "Money can't buy me love". It was thought at the time the youth would take over the world because the more benevolent adult war-generation went along with the new social love the adolescents were going crazy about. Then, in February 1964 the Beatles went over to America and appeared on the Ed Sullivan show, which changed America overnight, even Elvis lost some sleep. The Beatles had the sense of humour, the right movements and perfect music not seen before. This created a whole rock industry with lots of bands springing up named after some type of animal. The Beatles taught them to write their own music, which gave the bands more social power. John Lennon met Bob Dylan, who was playing more political songs, which caused politics to fuse with Rock and Roll, inspiring the Beatles to write deeper songs and eventually to travel to India as their music became more spiritual.

The baby-boomers had grown to be teenagers and they had started to build their own counterculture of love. Meanwhile, over in America there were more than a million teenagers opening up space all over the place who had created their own social revolution. It was a fabulous time; drugs, music and beautiful women everywhere. It made conventional society take notice as never before, it shook the establishment. Kennedy was the love president.

Nothing in history had seen the likes of it before. It was called the psychedelic generation because in the 1960s 'LSD' was not an illegal drug, and in California more and more people wanted to experience the new drug. It was a summer of love and a pilgrimage to San Francisco, from where the gospel began to spread of this dreamy new utopia based on brotherhood, love and LSD, where music played all day long like mana from heaven. It was a total eclipse of the heart. You could only believe it if you had been there. The ultimate aim was to create a society where everything was shared, everything was free, all was love and then making everything real by doing it and making it all happen. The love culture lived an uncluttered life, a simple life and a good life, all based upon the total love experience.

The counterculture had the courage to stand up and tell everybody else what they were doing wrong, about their rigid ideas of what the sexes should be doing and they wanted a change from war, war, war! Everything was love, peace and goodwill, and the hippy movement swayed the mainstream of life to breaking point. Everything coalesced into that perfect storm of societal love forces never seen on the planet before. The beat generation was a beatitude, it was a pleasure of living life in tenderness. Next, there was the Woodstock music and art fair 15-18th of August 1969; people came in their 100,000s.

Mozart (1756-1791) → Elton John (b.1947)

Beethoven (1770-1827) → Bob Dylan (b. 24 May, 1941)

Empedocles (495-444BC) → Ross Wiseman (b. 24 May, 1947)

Consequently, there was a great divide between the generations in America. Of course the press in America didn't take the Beatles seriously, thinking they would be a fly by night band. The Beatles in turn sparred with the press, which the press didn't expect. The Beatles admitted they wanted to break down the barriers between generations. There was the desire to gain social power through love music, but to use it for good. The Beatles claimed they were more popular than Jesus in his day. John Lennon said, "Through the music we have given you love." The Blacks in America were gaining more social power as well.

Woodstock was followed a few months later by Altamont in December 1969, where a biker gang started a fight at the festival, which symbolised the strained and drained idealism. Then, in the same year Charles Manson cleverly masqueraded behind the common image of being a Hippy and carried out the Tate killings which shocked the whole world. The basic problem by 1970, was the young generation had started to grow up and their point of view became more nuanced, which meant there were subtle changes in their points of view. Some left America and travelled over to India to continue their spiritual development, others put on suits and many became one with love, like Joplin in 1970. By 1972, the Baby-Boomer-Bubble-Burst, there was the Great Global Oil Shock and Strife became dominant over love.

The next Love-bubble will be bigger and create an Advanced Civilisation. Meanwhile, the Millennials will experience the great strife, the big bad and the crash of civilisation because of it. But through the bad the lessons are learned; they will learn to include knowledge with love this time, and they will learn never to let the business community take over and control society. They will learn that after the Great Love is the Enlightenment!

When Jesus Spoke from Heaven (9th February 2009)

One day while approaching forty years of age in the year 609AD, Muhammad was sleeping in the Hera cave on the outskirts of Mecca and had a remarkable vision. An angel (called Gabriel in the Koran) approached holding a sheet of paper in her hand saying, "Read!" At the same time Muhammad felt as though he was being strangled, and after the word 'read' was mentioned, he felt as though he was being released from the strangle hold. Muhammad replied, "What do you want me to read?"

This happened three times until the angel said, "Read in the name of god the creator.

Zoroaster (1520 BC) → Prophet Muhammad (571-632) → Joe Kennedy III (b.1980)

These religions were choking the people and the Angel who spoke to Muhammad in his vision was imploring him to 'read' the scriptures already penned that were in existence at the time. The word 'He' meant Jesus, and of course the sacred text in existence at the time was the New Testament. The New Testament would have brought the desired unity to Arabia, which Muhammad could easily have procured from al Sham near Damascus in Palestine where he traded.

My wife Feroza is a Muslim and we have four children.

On the 9th of February 2009, I was standing near our front door with my youngest daughter Nadia who was twelve-years-old at the time. Nadia is a prophetess and we were talking to the same angel who once appeared in the vision to Muhammad, so I took the opportunity to ask the Angel about the vision.

"Why did you ask Muhammad to read the New Testament when he was illiterate and didn't even know how to read?" I asked.

"He could have 'read' between the lines or asked about Jesus and learned from other people who were familiar with the scriptures on his trading missions!" Replied the Angel.

"Well couldn't you have been more specific and asked him to find people in Palestine who could have told him about Jesus and the world would have been much different today?" I replied.

"I could only have done so much, and what I did do to tell him was more than enough for most people ..." She replied.

I began to ask another question but was interrupted as the Angel continued to talk.
"... if you can keep quiet for a moment, Jesus wants to say something, and you might not get this rare opportunity again!"

"My people, it is your choice if you believe me or not!
My people, do not let the evil overshadow your goodness,
for everything that is within us is god.
For when you are in heaven your mind will change.
My love for all you people is greater than evil.
Trust within yourself and I believe you can do great things.
Have faith in god with love, knowledge and wisdom and you will become my people.
And in heaven we shall rule the Earth,
so do not let evil cloud your mind,
for we are the people of god."

Conclusion

There is a lot more to people than the system would have us believe; and there is more to society than is dreamt of in your dreams. The only reason Western Culture won't accept the fact that god projects a dream in the form of the universe is that they teach the reality of materialism [falsity], so the elite can live in luxury at the expense of the majority.
